FRONTISPIECE
TO
THE THIRTY-SEVENTH VOLUME.

HIPPOMENES AND ATALANTA.

ATALANTA was born in Arcadia, and, according to Ovid, she determined to live in perpetual celibacy; but her beauty gained her many admirers, and to free herself from their importunities, she proposed to run a race with them. They were to run without arms, and she was to carry a dart in her hand. Her lovers were to start first, and whoever arrived at the goal before her would be made her husband; but all those whom she overtook, were to be killed with the dart with which she had armed herself. As she was almost invincible in running, many of her suitors perished in the attempt, till Hippomenes, the son of Macareus, proposed himself as her admirer. Venus had presented him with three golden apples from the garden of the Hesperides, or, according to others, from an orchard in Cyprus, and as soon as he had started in the course, he artfully threw down the apples, at some distance one from the other. While Atalanta, charmed at the sight, stopped to gather the apples, Hippomenes hastened on his course, arrived first at the goal, and obtained Atalanta in marriage.

Apollodorus gives another account; he says, that Atalanta's father was desirous of raising male issue, and that therefore she was exposed to wild beasts as soon as born; she was, however, suckled by a she-bear, and preserved by shepherds. She dedicated her time to hunting, and resolved to live in celibacy. She killed two centaurs, Hyleus and Rhecus, who attempted her virtue. She was present at the hunting of the Calydonian boar, which she first wounded, and she received the head as a present from Meleager, who was enamoured of her. She was also at the games instituted in honour of Pelias, where she conquered Peleus; and when her father, to whom she had been restored, wished her to marry, she consented to give herself to him who could overcome her in running, as stated above.

FORSYTH's PATENT GUN-LOCK DEFENDED.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

I Some time ago noticed two succeeding insertions in your entertaining Magazine, which, treating on rifle shooting, introduced my name and performances in a very conspicuous manner. At that time I felt a great inclination to assure the public, that such records, so far from gratifying my vanity, were not pleasing to me, and my inexperience in writing replies of this nature, alone prevented my then contradicting some serious mis-statements.

I have lately had proofs, that the last insertion, signed W. Smith, has, by its very erroneous statements, produced considerable injury to the ingenious inventor of the Patent Lock: without ever having seen him, or corresponding with him, I now feel myself called upon to address you, that my silence may not sanction untrue statements, and with which my name has been improperly coupled, for the evident purpose of injury and injustice; and as I firmly believe that you, Sir, are actuated by principles too just to suffer your Magazine to become the vehicle of misrepresentation, to the injury of undoubted ingenuity, I freely hand my remarks to you, assuring you that they are uninfluenced by either interest or friendship.

The first statement in your September Number, errs in saying that Corporal Porteus won his silver cup on the 12th of July; there was a tie between him and Corporal Hewson, which, by subsequent shooting, was decided in Corporal P.'s favour. The shoulder shooting, by which I won the silver cup, was correctly stated as to hits; (i. e. five bull's eyes, and one hit near, and no misses) but it is wrong in the distance, which was a hundred, and not one hundred and ten yards; at which distance also I shot the pistol; and though I hit four bull's eyes following with the pistol, it is fair to add, that one of them was only half a ball in the bull's eye. So much for the trifling and apparent innocent errors of that correspondent, who, neverless, speaks of all the best makers of the rifles used in the Duke of Cumberland's corps of sharp shooters, without either partiality or rancour; and though he seems partial to Forsyth's Patent Lock, he speaks not enviously of Mr. Smith's pistol with a flint lock.

The letter inserted in your October Number, signed W. Smith, cannot boast of the same liberality; and he further takes upon himself to state things, as selected from my practice, to which I am nevertheless a stranger, and which truly surprise me, and by this ill-judged conduct he has forced me to undeceive the public.—Who can Mr. W. Smith be? If in his letter he did not allude to Mr. Smith the gunmaker, I should, from the language, &c. be inclined to suppose the latter to be the writer of the letter; but as Adjutant of the corps, and bearing the above in mind, I may venture to say, that the person so signing, can be no other, than Mr. W. Smith, who, though a member of the corps, is nevertheless a gun-maker by trade, working with his father. I am no stranger to Mr. Smith's work; I have used his rifles six years, and I know him to be a very good workman, whose rifles particularly deserve praise; on this account I feel additional regret, that, by his allowing such an insertion as that of October last, one which had the appearance of being written by an indifferent person, an accidental name-sake, who, speaking disinterestedly of Mr. Smith the gunmaker, as also of Forsyth patent lock, quotes me as a proof of assertions founded in trade jealousy only, and that by such conduct he should compel me to contradict his assertions.

It is to be lamented, that tradesmen can imagine that gentlemen will patronize them for railing against each other; it generally produces an opposite influence; and though a sportsman likes to hear hear an ingenious workman's opinion, he invariably allows it greater weight, if such is delivered without a mixture of envy or coarseness. Representations of the latter kind often excite curiosity, for bad inventions are seldom envied, and but for such attacks, I should have left Forsyth's patent lock to its fate; but as I have observed that this invention has a number of envious enemies, and partaking of sentiments which prefer to cherish rather than to damp ingenuity, I now feel even a pleasure in stating what my experience in the use of this lock has taught me.—Mr. Smith is incorrect in his statement when he says, "that ten hits out of twelve shots are rarely made at one hundred yards with a rifle of a quarter turn:" From the shot-roll of the corps it can be proved, that by steady men that has often been done, and sometimes even at longer ranges; though I allow that of late, and very properly, the quarter turn is very little in use with the Duke of Cumberland's Sharp Shooters.

He in many parts of his letter declares, that "in wet weather I could not have used the patent lock at all, as rain at any time will put the lock out of order." If I were to say all I think of this declaration, I should say much in very few words; but I prefer to prove my opinion by tendering a bet to Mr. Smith, or to any other enemy of the patent lock, as the best touchstone I can apply.—Let any one shoot a usual flint lock against my patent lock on a rainy day, shot for shot, for six hours, and without any kind of shelter, and I will agree that the person missing fire, shall each time pay the other from one to five guineas.—Persons may assert and not be serious, but when they stake their money, it at least proves that they believe what they advance.—He next says, "that I never bring it out without some accident happening to it." Of all persons, Mr. Smith should be the last to make this declaration; for he knows the only instance of what may be called "accident," occurred on the day when I won the case of rifle pistols, and with the very patent lock so much blamed; the accident alluded to, was, that I could not draw my ball, after having committed a most unpardonable error in loading, which might equally have happened to a rifle with a flint lock. It was therefore an accident, not occasioned by the patent lock, but by my own negligence. How unhandsome, then, is Mr. Smith's declaration, when, after being fully acquainted with the true cause of the accident, (for he helped me to rectify it) he ascribes it to the lock.—Want of knowledge or consideration, will render the best invention faulty, and even useless, and I have no hesitation in allowing, that when first I used the patent lock, I found it occasionally, but not frequently, miss fire; but I have since found, that the fault was invariably my own, occasioned by improper treatment: now that I understand its principle, I not only in its use feel the greatest confidence myself, but observation inspires persons who shoot with me with the same favourable opinion, and which accounts for the displeasure of Mr. Smith to hear it praised. If I am incorrect in any statement, Mr. Smith, or any one, may punish me by accepting my match, for the issue will be the best proof to decide, which of us has the most correct opinion of the merits of the patent lock.

Though, Mr. Editor, I have taken up a great portion of your time, I hope that you will excuse it, as justice is my sole motive; and lest your readers should imagine, that I am vain of the moderate skill I may possess, I beg to assure them, that I think myself entitled to very little credit, having practised the manly and skilful science of rifle shooting from my infancy; and to prove that I am not ambitious of being thought a first-rate shot, I conclude with a voluntary declaration, which, instead of envy, partakes of pride; for with pleasure do I assure you, that the Volunteer Rifle Corps to which I belong can produce several members who are better shots than myself.—I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

C. Random de Berenger.

MR. SHEWARD'S MATCH.

WEDNESDAY morning, the 6th instant, at six o'clock, Mr. Sheward, stable-keeper, of Park-lane, drove a new break and four fine blood-horses, for a wager, on the road from Piccadilly to Staines. The wager was, that he would drive four in hand fifteen miles in fifty minutes. He lost three minutes of his time in the first seven miles, and lost the wager by four minutes. Much rain having fallen in the night, the roads were against him, otherwise he would have won. About one thousand guineas were depending. There was a great concourse of spectators on foot and horseback.

The match is said to have been lost in consequence of certain knowing ones having deceived the driver as to time. Sir John Lade, Earl Sefton, Mr. Charles Buxton, Captain Agar, Mr. John Thompson, Sir Henry Smith, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Villeboys, Captain Durand, and Mr. Spicer, (all well-known whips of celebrity), are said to be of this opinion. Sheward has made another bet. His opponents bet him five hundred guineas, that he will not drive four horses fifteen miles in fifty minutes, and five hundred guineas, that he will not drive them the distance in fifty-two minutes. The bet is to be decided in April next.

FRAUDS

IN MEASURING CORN FOR DUMB ANIMALS.

A Case of a most aggravated nature was brought before the Magistrates of Banbury, Oxon, on Monday the 13th of August, 1810. A gentleman, representing a respectable house in London, put up at a large inn, in the above town, and ordered half a peck of oats for his horse. On the delivery, in the stable, by the hostler, from the appearance of the quantity, the gentleman suspected the measure, and was induced to measure them by one which he takes with him, (a patent leather one,) whereby he found the oats most shamefully deficient in measure, nearly forty per cent, and even by the landlord's own measures, which were false ones. The result was, that the Magistrates convicted the landlord of the fraud, and fined him the full penalty, as the law in such case directs; they also seized his two measures found in his corn-bin, which were both greatly deficient; and also fined him a further penalty nalty for having such in his possession: and his corn was also forfeited, and himself severely reprimanded by she Magistrates. The fines were given by the prosecutor to the poor of Banbury.

Much praise is due to the Mayor (Mr. Barnes,) and his fellow Magistrates, for their prompt attention to the business, who immediately, on the first application, convened a court for the purpose of deciding the case without a moment's delay, in order to save the prosecutor the trouble and expence of coming from a distant part, on a future day, to give his evidence. They also warmly expressed, in the strongest terms, their entire approbation of the prosecutor's conduct, as being fully entitled to the thanks of every traveller on the road, for his exertions in detecting a fraud which they conceived to be so pregnant with barbarity, and inconsistent with humanity.

A day or two after the above decision at Banbury, another case, exactly similar, occurred at an inn in Chipping-Norton, followed by circumstances tending greatly to enhance the enormity of the crime. The Magistrates, J. Townsend and T. Higgins, Esqrs. fined the landlady. Her measures were seized, her corn forfeited, and her conduct severely censured: in consequence of which, she was so enraged with resentment towards the prosecutor for detecting her, that she abused him in the most unwarrantable manner, and excited her servants and others to do the same, some of whom and herself laid hands on him in the parlour, threw him down in the mud in the street, and caused a riot. The above Magistrates immediately issued a warrant for the apprehension of her and those concerned; but they made their escape. The warrant is still out against them, and no doubt they will be punished according to their demerit.

It is a matter of serious and unspeakable regret that a necessity so generally exists for similar prosecutions against those, whose barbarity and avarice lead them to rob a dumb animal of his absolutely necessary food, without which it is very difficult for him to perform the task assigned to him; particularly when it is considered, that it is done by those under whose care and protection he is placed, and for which they are so amply remunerated.

We give the foregoing as we received it, and have to add, from a subsequent source of information, that at the last Oxford Assizes a true bill was found by the Grand Jury against the landlady of the Crown and Cushion Inn, at Chipping-Norton, her daughter, waiter, chamber-maid, ostler, boots, a Mr. Phillips, a Mr. Endall, and others, inhabitants of Chipping-Norton, for a riot and assault upon a respectable traveller, who, while at the above house, in the month of August last, having discovered a deficiency in the measure of oats delivered for his horse, laid his complaint before the Magistrates, when the landlady was fined in the full penalty, and the corn and measure forfeited.

We feel no pleasure in exposing these persons, but justice and the good of the public demand it.

RACING INTELLIGENCE EXTRA.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

IF you consider the following worthy of insertion in your next monthly Number, by giving it a place you will oblige

A CONSTANT READER.

Bath, March 23, 1811.

On Thursday, March 21st, was run on Lansdown, a sweepstakes of 5gs. each, ten subscribers, for horses not thorough bred, rode by gentlemen, 12st.; heats, once round the course (about a mile and a quarter).

Mr. Cresswell's b. g. (rode by the owner)	1	1
Mr. Bailey's b. g. (Mr. Cray)	4	2
Mr. Fitzherbert's g. g. (Mr. Lovelace)	2	3
Mr. G. Monkland named Mr. Naish's ch. g. (Mr. G. Monkland)	3	0
Sir John Hawkins's b. g. (Mr. Fenwick)	5	4
Mr. Crawford's gr. g. (the owner)	6	5

In consequence of the man at the scales making a mistake in weighing weighing previous to the start, the rider of Mr. Naish's gelding, on his return, was found about a pound deficient, and disqualified.

Messrs. Stewart, Rookwood, Fenwick, and Lovelace, were subscribers, but did not name.

The winner the favourite.—The first heat was finely contested between Mr. Cresswell and Mr. Monkland; afterwards, two and three to one on the bay gelding.

After the Sweepstakes, a match was decided between Mr. Christie's ch. colt, rode by the owner, and Mr. Fitzherbert's gr. h. Prisoner, rode by Mr. Lovelace; won easy by the former. At starting, four and five to one on Prisoner.

There have been several matches rode on this down lately, which have drawn many of the fashionables to the spot; but on this occasion we may fairly state to have witnessed county meetings which have been less numerously attended, and have fallen short in the splendour of equipage, the rank of fashion, and the blaze of beauty.

SPORTING PICTURES.

MR. Clifton Tomson has been painting some very good subjects in Yorkshire. He has painted Orville, Selim, and Evander, in good style, for the different owners of these celebrated stallions, and he has painted two pictures for Mr. Acklom, of Newbald, of two favourite horses, a bay hunter, and a grey, a present from the late Sir Thomas Gascoigne to Mrs. Acklom, who rides it, and which, previous to his death, was hunted by Mr. Thomas Gascoigne, his son.

The same artist has drawn for Mr. Best (his owner), the celebrated greyhound Snowdrop, got by Old Snowball; both father and son having won the Cup for four years at Malton. An engraving of this picture would be desirable. He has likewise taken a picture of Mr. Monson's black dog Balloon, who won the Cup at Malton in February last. The back ground, being the scenery of the wolds of Yorkshire, he has executed very happily, and given the wide extent of country very copiously to the eye of the spectator. It is not always that painters are fortunate to see what they paint.

RURIS AMATOR.

A WHOLE DAY TO OURSELVES!

ANECDOTE of the celebrated President Henault, the author of the Abrégé Chronologique, and Madame du Deffand.

They were both complaining one day of the continual interruptions they met with from the society in which they lived. "How happy should we be," said the lady, "to have a whole day to ourselves!" They agreed to try whether this was not possible: and at last found a small apartment in the Tuilleries, belonging to a friend, which was unoccupied, and where they proposed to meet. They arrived, accordingly, in separate conveyances, about eleven in the forenoon, appointed their carriages to return at twelve at night, and ordered dinner from a Traiteur. The morning was passed entirely to the satisfaction of both, in the effusions of love and friendship. "If every day," said the one to the other, "were to be like this, life would be too short." Dinner came, and before four o'clock, sentiment had given place to gaiety and wit. About six six the lady looked at the clock.—"They play Athalie to night," said she, "and the new actress is to make her appearance." "I confess," said the President, "that if I were not here, I should regret not seeing her." "Take care, President," said the lady; "what you say is really an expression of regret; if you had been as happy as you profess to be, you would not have thought of the possibility of being at the representation of Athalie." The President vindicated himself, and ended with saying, "Is it for you to complain when you were the first to look at the clock, and to remark that Athalie was acted to-night?" "There is no clock for those who are happy." The dispute grew warm, they became more and more out of humour, and by seven they wished most earnestly to separate. That was impossible. "Oh!" said the lady, "I cannot stay here till twelve. Five hours longer!—What a punishment!" There was a skreen in the room. The lady seated herself behind it, and left the room to the President. The President, piqued at it, takes a pen and writes a note full of reproaches, and throws it over the skreen. The lady picks up the note, and writes an answer in the sharpest terms. At last, twelve o'clock arrived, and each hurried off separately, fully resolved never to try the same experiment again!

BERKELEY HOUNDS.

THE following communication we received the latter end of last month, too late to give it insertion in our last Number:

"February 26, 1811.

"Notwithstanding the violent opposition that the Berkeley hounds have met with, and the consequent curtailment of country, they still continue to hunt in their usual style of excellence, and have had many capital runs this season; but the sport of last week surpassed them all. On the Monday they met at the kennel, and found at the back of the Nine-Pin public-house, Hedgerley; the fox went off in high style, over a fine country, and after a very capital run of an hour and a half, killed in Shardeloes Park, Amersham.—On the Wednesday, they met at Harefield Common, and found in Mad Bess Wood, and after a good run of an hour, lost at Pinner Hill; they then drew Scrubbhouse Furze, and instantly unkenneled, and after running near four hours, earthed him in Old Park Wood; the scent served so well, that for five miles together not a horse was with the hounds, and only three, out of a numerous field, were up at the last.

On the Saturday, they met at Pollard's Wood, and soon found a brace of foxes, one of which, with twelve couple of hounds, broke off for Burtons, and through the intervening inclosures and coverts, to Latimers, leaving Lay Hill to the right, by Botley, to Mr. Dorrien's Park, at Berkhampstead, where, after a complete race of an hour and an half, they run into him in great style; the remainder of the hounds, after running the other in covert for some time, whipped off and tried for another, which they soon found in Mr. Paddon's furze, and had a good run of an hour, when he went to earth in Blount's Wood."

AD-

ADVENTURES OF A PHEASANT.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

IF you think the undermentioned worthy of a nich in your entertaining Magazine, the insertion of it will much oblige a constant reader, &c. &c. G. T.

Aware of the implacable persecution exercised by Mr. Coke and his associates, against my unfortunate race, I fled out of Norfolk, on the 30th of last August, and, hardly allowing myself any rest, arrived in two days in the neighbourhood of London. The first object that attracted my curiosity, in the metropolis, was a corps of volunteers, firing with ball cartridge at a target in Hyde Park, and, wishing to witness the performance, I took my station in a tree about thirty yards from the spot, considering myself, when thus situated, to be in a state of perfect security. Unfortunately I had been accustomed to the skilful aims of peers and poachers, and did not make due allowance for the wandering bullets of these loyal practitioners, one of which fractured my beak, and proceeding in a diagonal direction, entered my brain, and instantly deprived me of life. I lay two days under the tree unnoticed, and began to fear that I should perish without ever being spitted, when a little boy, who had been feeding the swans in the Serpentine river, approached the spot where I was extended, seized me by my left leg, and carried me off towards Cumberland gate. He had hardly entered Oxford-street, when he was met by a tall, grim-looking man, with a silk handkerchief about his neck, who instantly collared the lad, exclaiming, in a voice of thunder, "You young rascal, you have shot a pheasant: where's your licence?" The poor boy assured his opponent that he did not do it, and offered to give me up, provided he might be let off; which the other, with great appearance of generosity, consented to. The boy took to his heels, and I to the great coat pocket of my new master, who proved to be Dick Dive, the celebrated pick-pocket. Mr. Dive directed his course towards Covent-garden, and when he entered Soho-square, met his intimate friend, the Hon. Mr. Nadir, who was a well-known patron of bruisers, bear-baiters, and the rest of the fraternity, with whom he frequently dined at the One Tun, in Clare-market. Nadir and Dive shook hands with great appearance of cordiality, and after chatting about the American Black (Molineux) departed in different directions. In the course of their short conversation, Nadir had contrived to steal me from Mr. Dive's pocket, and when the latter sallied down Frith-street, took off his hat, and throwing me into the crown of it, replaced it upon his head, scampering back to Oxford-street, with high delight at having done a knowing one. The Hon. Mr. Nadir was the third son of a peer, who had bequeathed him about seven hundred pounds a year, three hundred of which he had, with great generosity, lately settled upon a termagant mistress, and with the other four hundred contrived to support himself, six horses, an amiable wife, and three fine children. At the time to which I allude, Mrs. Nadir was confined to her house by illness, and as a pheasant would have been a very acceptable dainty to her, I entertained hopes of being carved carved at the table of a woman of fashion. These hopes were quickly frustrated. Mr. Nadir was a man of too much taste, not to prefer a healthy mistress to a sick wife, and accordingly marched with me in his hat, to Upper Titchfield-street, where he presented me to Mrs. Flounce, his enamorata, telling her that he was come to dine with her. "You'll dine no dines here!" was her answer, "I am engaged, so walk off." Mr. Nadir quietly obeyed the injunction, and was scarcely out of sight, when Discount, the City banker, drove up in his barouche and four to the door, to take Mrs. Flounce to Staines to dinner. "We'll take that pheasant with us," cried the lady, tossing me to Mr. Discount, "It will be a good make-up for our dinner."—"No, the devil," answered the banker, "that won't do—old Bush will never stand that—it would cut too deep a hole in his bill." So saying, he threw me back to madam, who had by this time removed her station to an open window. Mr. Discount's arm was more vigorous than he imagined, so out flew I into the street, where I was caught upon the iron railings below. Mr. Macleod, a Scotch tailor, was just then passing the house, and hastily huddled me into a bundle he carried under his left arm. This operation was scarcely performed, when Discount bolted out at the street-door, to regain me, "Where are my rascals," cried he, looking for his two grooms, "tippling at the ale-house, I suppose:" then espying Mr. Macleod, "pray, friend," cried he, "have you seen a pheasant?" "Yes," answered the tailor. "Yes—well, where is it?" "I hanna gotten it." "No! then who has it?" "The Cat—I kenned her gobble it up, and scamper into the area." Back retreated Mr. Discount to cross-examine the cat, and I jogged off with my new master to Jermyn-street. A consultation now ensued between Mr. and Mrs. Macleod, what they should do with me. The wife was for eating me outright; but her more prudent spouse recollected that he owed a Blackwell-Hall factor three hundred and fifty pounds, and that I should operate as a peace-offering between promise and payment. He dispatched me, therefore, by one of his journeymen, with his compliments to Mr. Serge. Mr. Serge gave the bearer a shilling, and having been lately returned member for a Kentish borough, forwarded me by the night coach to the mayor of the town he represented. A wag in the coach amused himself on the journey with exchanging the direction-ticket of the different parcels deposited in the seat of the coach, a species of hocus pocus which gave to Mrs. Wilkins, who kept an omnium-gatherum shop, in the High-street, the honour of receiving me, and presented to the mayor a box, containing ten peg-tops, four pounds of tallow candles, a gross of tin whistles, and forty lollypops. Mrs. Wilkins wondered at least fifteen times, who the dickens could have sent her a pheasant, and determined to present me to her son Tom, a seedsman, in Southwark, who had lately married a fat widow, with whom Mrs. Wilkins had many reasons to wish to be upon good terms. Thus I had not recovered from the fatigue of one journey, when I was destined to undergo another. Mrs. Tom Wilkins was a bit of an epicure, and was in the act of giving directions to her cook to dress me on the following day, and

and not upon any account to forget the bread sauce; when a footman, in an orange livery, faced with red, with long tags to his shoulder, rapped at the door, and deposited the following card—"Mrs. Mordecai at home—Wednesday evening, Finsbury-square." Mrs. Tom Wilkins had long endeavoured to get into Mrs. Mordecai's parties. Delighted with her unexpected elevation, she in a moment forgot her gluttony, and dispatched me with her most respectful compliments to the Finsbury Jewess. Alas! no Israelite was ever a greater wanderer than I. Mrs. Mordecai, on Wednesday evening, assured Mrs. Thomas Wilkins that I "was mosht exshellent;" which must have been matter of surmise in her, as on the preceding day she had sent me to Mrs. Winterbottom, the furrier, in the Strand. Mrs. Winterbottom sent me to Mr. Hilary, her attorney; and acquainted the Jewess that I was incomparably good. Mr. Hilary dispatched his clerk and blue bag, with me in it, to Mr. Vandervelt, a Dutch merchant, who packed me off to Sir Luke Linger, in one of the public offices, and by the same porter wrote a letter to Mr. Hilary, saying that I was excellent, and that his wife had devoured my left wing with great goût. Sir Luke Linger assigned me over to Mr. Ottoman, the Turkey merchant; which he had no sooner done than he met Vandervelt at the corner of Downing-street, and assured him, upon his honour, that I was incomparably good, and that he never ate a finer pheasant in the whole course of his life! No tempest-beaten mariner ever entered Plymouth harbour with half the pleasure I felt in descending the kitchen-stairs of Mr. Ottoman, who was a man that cared for no earthly being but himself, and at whose table, therefore, I confidently reckoned upon making a creditable exit. But woe is me! I had overstayed my market! The cook had no sooner plucked a few feathers from my breast, than she let me drop with an exclamation of "O most filthy!" Then seizing me with tongs with one hand, and holding her nose with the other, she sallied out towards the stable, and threw me upon the dunghill. Fortunately, a last year's almanack (lead pencil and all) lay beside me, and my right foot being uppermost, I hastily minuted down these memoirs, not to perch too far from the mark at which volunteers are firing. I can no more! the turnspit, who watched my progress from the kitchen to the dunghill, approaches to devour me * * *.

OURSELVES,

A COMEDY.

ON Saturday evening, March 2, 1811, a new comedy, intitled Ourselves, the production of Miss Chambers, the successful author of The School for Friends, was represented for the first time at the Lyceum Theatre.—The principal characters were thus represented:—

Sir John Rainsford -	Mr. Dowton.
George Fitz Aubin -	Mr. Holland.
Silvester O'Shallauhan	Mr. Johnstone.
Sir Sidney Beaufort -	Mr. Wrench.
Jack Darlington - -	Mr. De Camp.

The

The following is a sketch of the plot:—

Sir John Rainsford, a testy, discontented Baronet, privately espoused, in his youth, a beautiful and accomplished lady, whom, from motives of selfishness and pride, he afterwards abandoned. Octavia (Mrs. Horn), the offspring of this marriage, is adopted by her uncle, Mr. Seymour, a gentleman of eccentric manners, residing in Ireland—but her mother, who is too generous to reveal her marriage with Sir John, which she knows to be contrary to his wish, is driven from her brother's house, and takes refuge in a convent on the continent.—In this sanctuary she is disturbed by the war, and, meeting with George Fitz Aubin, a young man actuated by the most rigid principles of integrity and honour, without intrusting him with her melancholy history, she accepts of his protection, and he conveys her safely to London, where she is concealed at his lodgings.—Mr. Seymour, who was also the uncle of Fitz Aubin, and had reared him up in the expectation of bequeathing to him his fortune, on his death leaves his property to Octavia, with the proviso, that, in the event of her father being discovered, it should revert to Fitz Aubin—and he appoints as executors Silvester O'Shallauhan, an honest Irishman, who describes himself as a coal dealer (turf would be more in character) in the county of Tipperary—and Sir John Rainsford; to the latter of whom he is totally unknown. O'Shallauhan and his wife (Mrs. Harlowe), an English lady, who apes the manners of the nobility, come to London, to place Octavia under the care of Sir John Rainsford, her guardian; but, in their way to his house, the carriage breaks down opposite the residence of Sir Sidney Beaufort, a sprightly young man of fashion, and the unfortunate travellers are received by him and his sister, Miss Beaufort, with the most polite attention.—Octavia, however, who had met Sir Sidney in Dublin, some time before, where he had won her affections, and sought to make a base use of his conquest, no sooner perceives him, than she determines to quit the house: a perfect stranger in London, she strays into the Park, where Fitz Aubin rescues her from the insults of Jack Darlington, an ignorant fop, the son of Mrs. O'Shallauhan by a former marriage, who is counselled by his mother to run away with the young lady. Fitz Aubin takes her to his lodgings, where soon after Sir Sidney Beaufort and his sister arrive; and a very good scene is produced by the discovery of the two ladies concealed in the apartments of the philosophic censor morum, between whom and Miss Beaufort a violent passion subsists, which they fancy is nothing more than a mere Platonic affection. A temporary jealousy ensues, which, however, is soon dissipated; and the discovery of Sir John Rainsford, and the mysterious lady brought to England by Fitz Aubin, as the father and mother of Octavia, and her union with the reformed Sir Sidney Beaufort, conclude the comedy.

This is a brief outline of the principal characters and events; a variety of incidents are, however, elicited, in the progress of the piece, which increase the general spirit and vivacity of the scene. It is throughout a pleasing production—highly honourable to the taste and judgment of Miss Chambers, as a dramatist—but still more honourable to her feelings and her sen-sentiments, as a woman. None of the characters are new to the stage, but they are, in general, skilfully wrought—and many of their sallies, moral and political, are shrewd and pointed. Those clap-trap sentiments, which disgrace nine-tenths of our modern comedies, and which are the unerring signs of a poverty of ideas, a want of real genius, are studiously avoided in this piece. Neither the king or the constitution, the navy or the army, are introduced: the claim for applause is rested, and, we are happy to say, most successfully, on the broad basis of intrinsic merit. Another of the most prominent faults of our modern dramatists has been in a very great measure avoided—we allude to the introduction of the whining, tragi-comic morality of the German school. In most of the pieces drawn from that source, a sort of sentimental mania seems to pervade the characters—from the peer to the peasant, all are afflicted with a " morbid sensibility,"

" They smart and agonize at every pore."

The best feelings of humanity are the very inverse of this absurd delicacy. And we were pleased to find, that, while the morality of the present piece was scrupulously attended to, it was couched into style strictly consonant with nature —and, therefore, best adapted to the end proposed by the drama.—The language is chaste and elegant, and the more lively part of the dialogue evinces a considerable portion of real humour. Two or three excellent scenes arise from the well-imagined mistakes and embarrassments of the parties. Of this description is the scene between Darlington, O'Shallauhan, and Sir John Ramsford, where Darlington contrives to impress his father-in-law with the idea that he is the parent of Octavian. The subsequent scene at Fitz Aubin's lodgings, which grows naturally out of the former transactions, is also truly ludicrous. —If we were inclined to find fault with any part of this comedy, we should certainly object to the plot, which, in one or two instances, does not accord with probability. We are aware, that, in the formation of Comedy, whose plot is generally founded on fiction, that nice regard to probability may be dispensed with, which is looked for in Tragedy, where " the pathos (or end) is the result of the entire action, that is, of all the circumstances of the story taken together;" whereas " humour may be distinctly evinced in a single scene;" but, nevertheless, characters should never be made to act in a manner inconsistent with themselves—and we are inclined to think, that a man, possessing the honourable feelings of Fitz Aubin, would never run the risk of incurring—

——" The world's dread laugh,
" Which scarce the firm philospher can scorn,"

by permitting the residence of the unknown lady in his apartments. Nor is it at all likely that a woman, ill-treated, injured in the nicest point, as she had been, should, out of tenderness for the man who had wronged her, bear her misfortunes in silence, nor once attempt, in justification of her own honour, to expose his villainy to the world.

The Prologue, which was spoken by Mr. Eyre, is tolerably well written, and contained several very happy allusions. In one part it glances at the introduction of horses on the stage, in the following words—

" To aid our cause we bring no martial force,
" To gain the vict'ry by a troop of horse;"

which was received with mingled applause and disapprobation—many of the audience conceiving it fair game; while others looked upon the introduction of the subject, as extremely invidious. The Epilogue was excellently delivered by Mrs. Glover; it possesses very great merit —The assimilation of the first performance of a play, with the passing of a bill through parliament, is a good idea, and was very neatly expressed.

The characters were, in general, ably supported. Mr. Dowton's manner is peculiarly adapted to the representation of peevish old age—he was extremely happy in his personation of the suspicious self-tormented old Baronet.—Mr. Wrench attempted to perform the character of Sir Sidney Beaufort, whom it strikes us the author intended to be an accomplished gentleman—fiery and volatile it is true—but, nevertheless, polished and elegant. Mr. Wrench seemed to think differently. He bounced and swaggered, which he appeared to mistake for natural vivacity, while nine-tenths of what he uttered was unintelligible, from the rapidity of his speech.—The character of O'Shallauhan was excellently supported by Mr. Johnstone. It differs very considerably from the generality of Irish characters which we have been accustomed to see. O'Shallauhan is not so fond of blundering as most of his countrymen on the stage; and if he does make a slip occasionally, it is amply compensated by some succeeding remark—Miss Duncan's delineation of the accomplished Miss Beaufort, a character full of life and spirit, but corrected by the most virtuous principles, was very highly applauded. She sang a little air, which is attached to the character, in a very tasteful style. The part of the Lady, which was sustained by Mrs. Glover, affords little opportunity for the exertion of ability.—The scene with her long-lost daughter, and with her husband, excite very general interest.

The piece went off with the greatest approbation, and was announced for repetition amidst peals of applause.

DESCRIPTION OF THE RHINOCEROS.

From Captain Williamson's "Oriental Field Sports."

THE natural history of the rhinoceros is perhaps less understood than that of any other Asiatic quadruped. With its anatomy we have long been sufficiently acquainted; but in regard to its habits, its powers, and many other very interesting points, nothing authentic has hitherto been published. Even now, indeed, we are compelled to rely much on the report of those residing in situations frequented by the rhinoceros, for most of the particulars exhibited. The impenetrable jungles in which this animal mostly resides, the unparalleled ferocity of his disposition, his almost invulnerable coat of mail, and the rapidity of his motions, which not only are quicker than those of the elephant, but are accompanied with a vivacity, such as a cursory view of the animal would by no means suggest, all oppose the most formidable obstacles to an intimate acquaintance with him in his wild state.

It is very rarely that the rhinoceros has been found equal to six feet in height; he is ordinarily not more than four and a half, or five. His

His head is long and clumsy, the eyes small, the ears somewhat resembling those of a calf, or of a deer, and on his nose he bears a horn of from three to four inches long, of a blunt conical form, rather curving towards his forehead. This appears to be his sole weapon. He is a granivorous animal, and has teeth similar to those of horned cattle. His legs much resemble those of an uncommonly stout ox, with which animal his form in general corresponds. His tail is short, and armed with a scanty portion of strong short bristles, rather inclined, like the tails of elephants and wild hogs, to range laterally, but not very conspicuously so. His body is secured from injury by the extreme density of his skin, which in many places is near an inch thick, hanging over him in large wrinkles, the one overlapping the other down to his knees, where they appear to discontinue, or to assume a more even appearance, not unlike the scales on the legs of poultry. His whole surface, except the tail, is free from hairs.

The rhinoceros is the inveterate enemy of elephants, attacking whenever he can find them single, or at least not protected by a male of great bulk; ripping without mercy, and confiding in his coat of mail to defend him from the puny attacks of the females, as well as to resist the teeth of young males. The apparent bluntness of his horn, which is about as broad at the base as it is high, would appear to render it but an insignificant weapon, and inadequate to penetrate any hard or tough substance. An instance, which I shall quote in this chapter, will however give a competent idea how formidable its powers are, and remove every doubt as to the probability of a rhinoceros being able to cope with elephants. The rhinoceros, as well as the camel, is retromingent, and, like that animal, not only smells extremely rank, but its urine is highly offensive and corrosive. This might perhaps be of no moment, had not the rhinoceros a filthy trick of discharging his water suddenly at such as are behind him, causing great pain and inflammation to the unfortunate bye-stander. The lizard and spider are equally obnoxious on this account; especially the former, which may be seen daily in great numbers on the walls and ceilings of the best houses in India; whence they often sprinkle persons below. If the part on which the urine falls be not immediately washed, a blister will soon rise, followed by an excoriation extremely difficult to heal. Camels should be removed as fast as possible from the spot to which they bring a tent to be pitched, else they will stale soon after being relieved from their burthens, and render the place so obnoxious as to preclude the possibility of occupying it.

The rhinoceros is seldom to be found on the western side of the Ganges, though the jungles there are fully competent to afford abundant shelter; nor indeed has an elephant ever been seen in its wild state but to the eastward, and far distant from the banks of that noble river. It should seem that those animals are partial to the immense tracts of the surput, or tassel grass, which skirt the vast jungles bordering our possessions on that side, and which being composed of lofty forests of saul and sissoo trees, filled up with various sorts of underwood, offer an asylum to the ferine species, such as cannot be equalled in any part of Europe, and can be compared only with with the prodigious wildernesses of the American interior.

It may serve as a proof how remarkably careful the rhinoceros must be of its young, when it is understood, that very few have ever been taken alive. The natives have an opinion, that when wounded, they destroy them; but I never could obtain any satisfactory information on this head; it may, no doubt, be classed among the million of absurdities with which a person, recording all the nonsense current among an ignorant and superstitious race, might swell many an ample volume! Certainly few are seen in the possession of gentlemen; which may be owing to the little pains taken to obtain that which, when obtained, would prove a troublesome and dangerous acquisition. I do not recollect more than three, viz. one with the late worthy collector of Bhaugulpore, Mr. Cleaveland, which I believe did not live very long; another with Mr. Matthew Day, of Dacca: and the third with Mr. Young, of Patna. The last used occasionally to walk about the streets, and was for a long time considered perfectly innocent; but, if my information be correct, was latterly found to be vicious, and was in consequence destroyed. Mr. Day's rhinoceros, which was by far the largest of them all, was kept in a park, into which it was not very safe to venture. What became of it I do not know, but conclude his fate to have been long since decided by his growing vice.

The skin of the rhinoceros is much valued, and often sells for a great price. It is in estimation according to its thickness, and to its clearness when freed from the fleshy membranes within; as also in proportion to the polish it will take. That from the shoulder, is most prized; a shield made of it will resist a leaden bullet, which, for the most part, flattens on it the same as when fired against a stone. An iron ball, however, from a smart piece, will generally penetrate, and such is invariably used by those who make a livelihood by selling the skin and tallow of this animal; the latter being considered by the natives as infallible in removing swellings and stiffness from the joints. We find, that in our enlightened portion of the globe, innumerable articles are sold as genuine, supposed to be imported from distant soils, but which are not adequate to the production of a tenth part of our own expenditure; if such be the case amid the thousands who possess a knowledge of chemistry and of commerce, what must be the extent of the imposition among a people utterly ignorant of all science, who neither read nor travel to reap information, and whose superstitious bigotry can scarcely be equalled! Were all the shields and all the grease sold as genuine, absolutely so, the whole breed of the rhinoceros must have been long since extirpated.

The shecarries, or native sportsmen, who lie in wait for the rhinoceros, are ordinarily furnished with jinjals, or heavy matchlocks, such as are commonly appropriated for the defence of mud forts, and may be properly classed with the arquebuss of former times. They carry balls from one to three ounces in weight; and having very substantial barrels, are too heavy to fire without a rest. Many have an iron fork of about a foot or more in length, fixed by a pivot not far from the muzzle, which being placed on a wall, in a bush, or eventually on the ground, serves to support port it, and enables the shecarrie to aim with great precision, which he seldom fails to do. It has been found, that in the defence of some mud forts, in Bundelcund especially, the besieged have exhibited most astonishing dexterity in this particular, rarely failing to hit their object in the head, or near the heart, though at very great distances. All the fire-arms made in India for the use of the natives have small cylindrical chambers, and are mostly of a very small bore. They impart a wonderful impetus to the ball.

To the power of an iron ball, discharged from a jinjal, even the rhinoceros must submit; though sometimes he will carry off one or more balls, and wander many hours before he drops. The aim being taken from a tree, or from some inaccessible situation, in which the shecarrie feels himself secure, and a steady cool sight can be taken, rarely proves incorrect. Levelling with precision at the eye, the thorax, or under the flap of the shoulder, all which are principal objects, he generally inflicts a fatal wound. The rhinoceros now becomes desperate; roaring, snorting, stamping, and tearing up the ground both with his horn and his feet, as bulls are wont to do, butting at trees, and at every object that may be within his reach. The cautious shecarrie awaits with patience for his last gasp; sensible that, while a spark of life remains, it would be highly imprudent to venture from his state of safety, or to approach the ferocious prey. Oxen are ordinarily used to drag the carcase away, which is the common mode of conveyance, horses not being employed in India, except for riding, among the natives, and because elephants and horses are so afraid of even a dead rhinoceros, as to render it peculiarly difficult to induce their approach within either sight or smell of one. Elephants that have been long taken, and which in all probability may have in some measure forgotten their old enemy, do not in general evince such extreme dread; though when they do venture, it is always with very evident distrust, and after much evasion.

One very striking peculiarity attends this animal; viz. that it invariably goes to the same spot to dung, until the heap becomes so high as to render further increase inconvenient; when a fresh spot is chosen, usually on a small opening in the midst of a heavy jungle. These heaps, while they serve as beacons to warn other animals, which no doubt are also guided by the scent, and other instinctive circumstances, to a knowledge of their dangerous vicinity, afford to the shecarrie an opportunity of making certain of his object. Much caution is necessary in approaching the purlieus of these extraordinary piles. The rhinoceros is endued with a remarkably quick sense of smelling, and is said to be extremely crafty in stealing through the cover to surprise whatever may unfortunately come near his haunt. We have the more reason to wonder at such conduct, when we consider that the rhinoceros is not carnivorous, and that nature has enveloped him with such a complete armour against the attacks of the whole brute creation: probably, were we able to analyze the subject completely, we should find that such destructive sallies are only made by females having young, and resulting from a jealousy, of which many other animals participate considerably.

The shecarrie may, however, unless ess he examine the dung, be under a mistake, though he will not be very grievously disappointed; for the sauboor, or elk, has the same habit of dunging in piles. These animals grow to an immense size, and their skins are very valuable, being, when properly prepared, at least as soft as sheep-skins, and very strong. The males are nearly black, having tanned points, and carrying broad, heavy horns: the does are more of a mouse or roan colour, and of an inferior size to the buck. Elks are not very common in India, as they keep most on the frontiers, in the heavy jungles already described; they are also to be seen occasionally to the westward, in the hills stretching from Midnapore to Chunar. Though the elk cannot be compared with the rhinoceros for mischief, and will, on the contrary, like all the deer species, rather retire from, than meet approach, except in the rutting season, when bucks are generally very vicious, yet he is not always passive, being sometimes known to attack without the least provocation.

As an instance of the extremely savage disposition of the rhinoceros, I shall adduce a memorable circumstance which occurred about the close of the year 1788. Two officers belonging to the troops cantoned at Dinapore, near Patna, went down the river towards Monghyr to shoot and hunt. They had encamped in the vicinity of Derriapore, and had heard some reports of a ghendah, or rhinoceros, having attacked some travellers many miles off. One morning, just as they were rising, about day-break, to quest for game, they heard a violent uproar, and on looking out, found that a rhinoceros was goring their horses, both of which, being fastened by their head and heel ropes, were consequently either unable to escape or to resist. The servants took to their heels, and concealed themselves in the neighbouring jow jungles, and the gentlemen had just time to climb up into a small tree, not far distant, before the furious beast, having completed the destruction of the horses, turned his attention to their masters! They were barely out of his reach, and by no means exempt from danger; especially as he assumed a threatening appearance, and seemed intent on their downfall. After keeping them in dreadful suspense for some time, and using some efforts to dislodge them, seeing the sun rise, he retreated to his haunt; not, however, without occasionally casting an eye back, as with regret, at leaving what he wanted the power to destroy.

This well-known instance is more illustrative than a myriad of details from the natives, to establish the cruel disposition of the rhinoceros: it is, I believe, the only fact which has been completely ascertained within many years, if ever before, in proof of the wanton attacks in which the rhinoceros indulges. In this, its natural antipathy to the elephant is not considered; possibly there may be some motive for its conduct towards that animal. The incident just described may be deemed the more curious, as it has been scarcely ever known that a rhinoceros has appeared on the western bank of the Ganges; to which it was probably carried by some inundation, perhaps on an island in the Gogra, and landed promiscuously, wherever it found means to escape from the violence of the current.

In the former part of this number, when adverting to the horn of the rhinoceros as a powerful weapon, pon, I mentioned, that an instance would be furnished of its powers. In explanation, I have to inform the reader, that one of the horses destroyed on the above occasion was saddled, and was killed by a stroke of the horn; which not only penetrated completely through the saddle-flap, and padding, but fractured two ribs, leaving a wound through which a small hand might pass into the horse's lungs. The rhinoceros in question continued for some time to infest the country, rendering the roads impassible; but, a handsome reward being offered, he was shot by an adventurous shecarrie, with a jinjal, or wall piece, that carried a large iron ball; not, however, before many travellers and villagers had fallen victims to his ferocity. I was informed that he was upwards of six feet high at the shoulder.

It does not appear that the rhinoceros does much damage to the cultivation near the confines of those large jungles in which he is usually found; nor do I ever hear of their being seen in herds: pairs have frequently been observed. Nor have we any document whereby to guide our opinion regarding the period of gestation, or the number of the young; which, from the various points to be considered, we may perhaps be right in fixing at unity. Were it otherwise, we should see the species over-running every part of the country, and occupying every sufficient cover; for we have no evidence, nor in truth any reasonable conjecture, as to any natural enemy existing, sufficiently powerful to thin their numbers. It has already been shewn that the elephant, which is the only animal that could be placed on a par with the rhinoceros, so far from being its superior, is rather compelled to resort to defensive measures.

Many assert, that herds of elephants, in which there are females having young calves, will not hesitate to stand bravely against the rhinoceros; and this is so conformable to the ordinary course of nature, which dictates to each mother to defend its progeny, that we may assent thereto without any violence to our understanding; but there our coincidence should stop, and by no means join with such as do not hesitate to assure us, that such herds rather seek than avoid their enemy. This is carrying the matter too far; it is subverting the wisest of nature's laws, which prompts to self-preservation. It could hardly be supposed that a mother, with a babe at the breast, would seek that danger which, if single, and bereft of the object of her affection, she would use every means to avoid. We should as soon expect to see an ewe seeking for a wolf, because she had a lamb.

Although the rhinoceros appears to subsist in this wild state on grass, leaves, and occasionally on corn, yet when domesticated he will not thrive unless in a good paddock, and well fed once or twice daily with rice or cakes; and it is peculiar that, under such circumstances, he loses the habit of dunging in a pile. I should be inclined to suspect that this anomaly originated from the want of a mate. Both the rhinoceros and the elephant, at certain seasons, become extremely lustful; or, in the language of Hindostan, they are must. This applies only to the males; which, however tame at other times, during a week or ten days, or often for a longer period, discharge an offensive matter from the apertures at the temples, and are extremely unruly. While in this state, a male elephant is generally quite unfit for every capacity in which he is ordinarily employed, and should be approached with extreme caution, even by his own mohout. It sometimes happens, that after being mounted, he cannot for fear of his life descend again; and many a mohout has been obliged to sit for several days and nights together on his elephant. Some have been taken off by the elephant's trunk; but that member is so extremely tender, that a smart stroke or application of the point of the hankus, or guiding iron, seldom fails to put a stop to such attempts. The very look of a must elephant chills the blood. I should think a rencontre between an elephant and a rhinoceros, both in that state, must be highly interesting.

VOLUNTEER CAVALRY RACE.

A Law Case, tried at Berkshire Spring Assizes, Reading, 1811.

Quelch v. Gearing.

THIS was a cause, tried at the above assizes, and is particularly interesting to the Volunteer Cavalry, and, likewise, to the sporting world in general. An ornamented Silver Cup, of the value of 50gs. was given by the Officers of the First Berks Regiment of Cavalry, to be run for by horses which had never started for any regular plate, with the intention of exciting the members to emulation, in regard to the riding of good and useful half-bred horses in the ranks.—The plaintiff's half-bred mare, Careless, was proved, in the course of the trial, to be fully qualified. On the other hand, the defendant's horse, King Alfred, was ascertained, by indisputable evidence, to have been provided for the express purpose of carrying away the Cup, and to have previously run at Northampton and other Races.—Colonels Dundas and Stead, Captain Lord Folkestone, and many other highly respectable witnesses, fully established the plaintiff's case.—The defendant endeavoured to avail himself of the possibility of the Cup not being intrinsically worth 50l. which amount (as the object of contest) is necessary to the constituting of a legal race. This attempt was regarded by the Court as frivolous, and a verdict was, consequently, given in favour of the plaintiff, for the sum of 53l. 17s. 2d. which was proved by Col. Stead to be the price paid for the Cup.—Mr. Russell, of Ramsbury, attorney for plaintiff; Mr. Ward, of Faringdon, attorney for defendant.

The Earl of Craven tried three game causes, as plaintiff, against a Mr. Cooke, in the first of which his Lordship obtained a verdict of one farthing damages, and the two last verdicts were given in favour of the defendant.

IDENTITY OF A PONEY.

A Law Case tried at the Hants Spring Assizes, Winchester, 1811.

Fuller v. George Garrett, Esq.

THIS was an action of Trover, to recover possession of a poney, which the plaintiff, who lives at Lyndhurst, alledged to have been stolen from him in October or November, 1803. To prove that the poney in question was the identical one said to be stolen, sixteen witnesses had been brought from Lyndhurst. The case was opened by Mr. Jekyll; and on the first witness being being called on the part of the plaintiff, Mr. Burrough rose and said, that it was impossible the action could be maintained, as the plaintiff had no interest whatever in the said poney, she having been stolen in the life-time of Mrs. Fuller's former husband, consequently she had never been the property of the plaintiff (Fuller), and that the action should have been brought in the names of Fuller and his wife, as Administratrix of her late husband. This objection was deemed fatal by the learned Judge, who immediately directed the plaintiff to be non-suited; by which decision he is saddled with the costs. The defendant, however, through his Counsel, Messrs. Burrough and Gaselee, made a proposal to the plaintiff, that, even then, if he could produce evidence to satisfy any gentleman of the county, that the poney was his property, previous to the year 1799, (to which period the defendant was fully prepared, by several of the most respectable witnesses, to trace her back) he would instantly give her up.—Accordingly it was agreed, that the case should be referred to arbitration to Charles Mitchell, Esq. of Mount Royal, near Lyndhurst; and both plaintiff and defendant are to submit to him their several affidavits on oath; and on his decision the final issue of this cause will depend. As the plaintiff's counsel, however, in this cause, stated that he had no less than sixteen witnesses ready to prove the identity of the poney, and that she was stolen on or about the months of October or November, 1803, it is but right also to mention, that Mr. Garrett, the defendant, would have produced the most incontestible and connected chain of evidence, by which the poney could be regularly and correctly traced through the hands of his late father, Moses Greetham, Esq. Captain Taylor of H. M. S. Apollo, Captain Kent, of the Royal Marines, and lastly into the possession of Captain Fitzgerald, also of the Royal Marines, of whom Captain Kent bought her in the year 1799, since which period she has hardly ever been lost sight of by many of the most respectable inhabitants of Portsmouth. Nothing but these strong and powerful proofs, that the poney was his rightful property, would have induced the defendant to resist the claim of the plaintiff. But though the cause is ended, Mr. Garrett still wishes the plaintiff to be convinced of his error, and has therefore consented to refer the case to the arbitration of a most respectable Gentleman of the county.

CRIB,

AN ENGRAVING.

IN our Magazine for January last, we gave an engraving of Molineux, the sable pugilist.—This month we present a portrait of his celebrated opponent, Crib.—The likeness, we are assured, is good, and the attitude no less correct. That the figure is a striking one, our readers, we believe, will not deny. Should, however, any one question it, Mr. Crib, no doubt, would, per force, if required, give proof not only of its being a strong, but likewise, as observed above, a striking likeness.

To this article, we have only to add our thanks to the gentleman who favoured us with this and other drawings for our Magazine.

ON

ON THE HYDROPHOBIA.

Written by the late Dr. Franklin, but not printed in his works.

LATELY turning over a Medical Dictionary, my eye was caught with the word hydrophobia, which the ingenious author divides into two different species; he defines the meaning of the word to be "a dread of water," and that the name of the disease is taken from the most predominant symptom which occurs in patients, who are bitten by a mad dog. Without detracting from the merit of the medical writer of the article, I cannot help thinking, that the genus of the disease, which he has named hydrophobia, should rather have been phobia, and that the names and numbers of the species should have been taken from names of the objects of fear or aversion. Impressed with this idea, I committed to paper the following species of phobia: which I hope will find an humble corner in your highly and justly-esteemed Magazine.

I shall begin by defining phobia in the present instance, to be a fear of an imaginary evil, or an undue fear of a real one.

The first species of phobia that I shall name is the Cat Phobia. It will be unnecessary to mention instances of the prevalence of this distemper. It is well known that several gentlemen of unquestionable courage, have often retreated from the sight of a cat, and who have even discovered signs of fear and terror upon being confined in a room with a cat, that was out of sight.

2. The Insect Phobia. This disease is peculiar to the female sex. A spider, a flea, or a fly alighting upon a lady's neck, has often produced an hysterical fit. To compensate for this defect in the constitutions of certain ladies, nature has kindly endowed them with the highest degree of courage, with respect to the great object of religious fear. They dare "provoke even Omnipotence to arms" by irreverently taking his name in vain in common conversation. Hence our ears are often grated by those ladies with the exclamations of "Good God,"—"O Lord, &c." upon the most trifling occasions. Dr. Young seems to have had this species of insect phobia in his eye, when he cries out,

> "Say, O! my muse—say whence such boldness springs,
> Such daring courage—in such tim'rous things,
> Start from a feather—from an insect fly,
> A match for nothing—but the Deity!"

3. The Odour Phobia, is a frequent disease, with all classes of people. There are few men or women to whom smells of some kind are not disagreeable. Old cheese has often produced paleness and tremor in a full-fed guest.—There are odours from certain flowers that produce the same effects: hence it is a figure to say that there are persons who "die of a rose in aromatic pain."

4. The Dirt Phobia. This disease is peculiar to certain ladies, who make every body miserable around them with their excessive cleanliness; the whole of their lives is one continued warfare with dirt, their rooms resound at all hours with the noise of scrubbing brushes, and their entries are continually obstructed with brooms and buckets.

5. The Solo Phobia, by which I mean the dread of solitude. This distemper is peculiar to persons of vacant

vacant minds, and guilty consciences; such people cannot bear to be alone, especially if the horror of sickness is added to the pain of attempting to think, or to the terror of thinking.

6. The Want Phobia. This disease is chiefly confined to old people. It is not the father of Tristram Shandy alone, that wipes the sweat from his face, and examines both sides of his coin every time he pays it away. There are few old men who part with money without feeling some symptoms of an intermitting fever. This distemper has arisen to such a height, as to furnish the most entertaining and ludicrous scenes in plays and novels.

7. The Doctor Phobia. This distemper is often complicated with other diseases. It arises in some instances, from the dread of taking physic, or of submitting to the remedies of bleeding and blistering; in some instances I have known it occasioned by a desire sick people feel of deceiving themselves by being kept in ignorance of the danger of their disorder, and it may be supposed that, " the dread of a long bill, is one cause of the doctor phobia."

8. The Ghost Phobia. This species is most common among servants and children. It manifests itself chiefly in passing by churchyards and old empty houses; I have heard of a few instances of grown people, and of cultivated understandings, who have been afflicted with this species of phobia. Physicians who have sacrificed the lives of their patients, through carelessness, rashness, or ignorance, as also witnesses who have convicted by their evidence—judges who have condemned by their influence,—and kings who have executed by their power, innocent persons through prejudice or resentment, are all deeply affected with the ghost phobia.

9. The Death Phobia. The fear of death is natural to man—but there are degrees of it which constitute a disease. It prevails chiefly among the rich, the luxurious, and the profane. A man of pleasure used frequently to say in his convivial moments, that " this world would be a most delightful place to live in, if it were not for that cursed thing called death—it comes in and spoils all." The late King of Prussia always concealed his occasional indispositions from his subjects, lest he should be led after them to connect the idea of his sickness with that of his death. I have heard of a man who possessed this death phobia in so high a degree, that he never would see his friends when they were sick, avoided seeing funerals—and, upon one occasion, threatened to kick the sexton of a church out of his house, for inviting him to the burial of one of his neighbours.—It is remarkable, that even old age, with all its infirmities, will not subdue this disease in some people. The late Dr. Johnson discovered the most unphilosophical as well as unchristian fear of dying in the seventy-third year of his age: and the late Dr. Porterfield, after living eighty-four years, went from Edinburgh to Padua, in Italy, in order by exercise and a change of climate, to protract the hour of his dissolution.

Thus, Sir, have I given you a list of the principal species of phobia. If it should merit your approbation, and be well received by your numerous readers, I may, perhaps, send you upon some future occasion, an account of the different species of Mania.——Your humble servant, J. J. B.

ACTION

ACTION FOR CRIM. CON.

Tried at the Winchester Spring Assizes, March 6, 1811.

Palmer v. Griffiths.

THIS was a Special Jury cause, and was brought against the defendant, to recover damages for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife.

Mr. Jekyll, for the plaintiff, stated the case, as it was afterwards detailed in evidence. The plaintiff is an auctioneer and coal-merchant, residing in the neighbourhood of Newport. The defendant is an attorney, inhabiting that town.--He is a married man, and the father of several children. The parties had been on terms of intimacy for many years; but the plaintiff, from a variety of concurring circumstances, suspecting his wife's infidelity with the defendant, placed an old washerwoman under a bed in his (plaintiff's) house; where he also secreted himself in such a position that they could discover all those who entered the room. After remaining in that situation for an hour and an half, they observed the happy pair pass through the room into an adjoining apartment—the two spies shortly after rushed out of their lurking-place, and surprised the amorous couple on the floor, in such a situation as to leave no doubt of their criminal connection.

Mr. Serjeant Pell, for the defendant, made several pointed observations against the plaintiff, for having placed himself in such a situation as to be the witness of his own dishonour—and, with great force and ingenuity, contended, that from the sudden interruption of the plaintiff and his old washerwoman, there had not been time for the defendant to carry his criminal intention into effect.

The learned Judge (Chambre), however, was of a different opinion: and the Jury agreeing with his Lordship, found a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages, 100l.

BOXING EXTRAORDINARY.

THE astonishment of the fistic amateurs will in a high degree be excited by the following account of a pugilistic contest which took place on Saturday, the 16th instant, betwixt Molineux, who has challenged any man in England to combat for two hundred guineas, from one day to six weeks notice, and Powers, who is a second rater, about equal with Dogherty, but a stone heavier. The cause of the battle, or which might rather be termed a turn-up, was in consequence of an un-gemman-like allusion to tawney complexion on the part of Powers, who, with more energy than elegance, swore destruction to the fraternity of black millers, although he had been vanquished by Richmond some time since. Mighty words arose, which would be unintelligible were we to describe them; but on pointed insults over and over being given to Molineux, in the house of Richmond, whose forbearance entitled him to praise, Molineux and Powers stripped, not for hundreds but for love (technically terming it), and that love on rough stones! Powers was backed in strength by two or three, who entered Richmond's house with him; and as the wrath of the multitude present was pre-eminently displayed against the blacks, Richmond stood by his friend, and

Young

Young Belcher, who had witnessed the whole affair, lent protection also to Molineux.

A battle, which lasted seventeen minutes, took place, which will best be conveyed by a general description. An irregular sort of a ring was formed, and at the first set-to Powers nobbed his adversary about the head and got away, and this, to a man of science, is easily done, as Molineux possesses but little of that requisite; but his fighting is of another kind, which Crib can testify. Powers was not able to move the Black, and, after hitting, he was pursued by Molineux into the crowd, and not able to plant a hit. In other rounds an irregular close took place, and both men fell. Towards the conclusion, Molineux got a hit at his antagonist's head, but it was at too great length to effect much; but, in the subsequent round, he gave Powers a doubler in the body, which caused a copious effusion of Deady's geneva. Castor oil resounded the air, and whether that had the effect of putting an end to the combat, a Whitelocke, or suffering from the blow, the vanquished best knows, but Powers would fight no more. The Black had an eye-lid swollen, and a cut in the lip, but he afterwards accompanied four ladies to the Theatre.

If, as is rumoured (from the antipathy to a Black being the Champion of England) the first-rate fighters of the day think to treat Molineux's pugilistic powers with contempt, by planting a second-rater against him whom they dare not encounter—such will add fresh laurels to his fame.

DOHERTY versus WYATT.

THE proceedings in an action for Crim. Con. tried in the Court of King's Bench last month, in which Mr. Hugh Doherty was plaintiff, and Mr. Wyatt defendant, having attracted much of the public attention, we have extracted from an account of this trial, the speech of Mr. Garrow in opening the case on behalf of the plaintiff, by which the mystery which has so long hung over the conduct of this injured gentleman is clearly unfolded.*

"May it please your Lordship; Gentlemen of the Jury;—you have collected from my learned friend, Mr. Adolphus, that this is an action, in which the plaintiff complains that the defendant has been guilty of criminal conversation with his wife. It is probable that the name of Mr. Doherty, the plaintiff in this cause, is not new to you, because his cause is one which I now take leave to say, after having attentively considered the papers before me, and having conversed with his near relative in the most confidential, and, I may add, in the most satisfactory manner, (I speak of a gentleman of our profession in Ireland); having conversed with this most respectable young gentleman, I take leave to say, that the sufferings of his brother, Mr. Doherty, the present plaintiff, have brought him too frequently before the public. I do assure you, without affectation, that I should be happy to retire from the conduct of this cause, conscious of my inability to do justice to it in a way satisfactory to my own feelings; for I am persuaded there never was a man presented to a court, complaining of a civil injury, whose wrongs equalled those of Mr. Doherty. I have no secrets to keep; I am not standing here to praise all the acts of this gentleman, my client; on the contrary, I shall humbly concur in those sentiments, which I am sure his Lordship will entertain with regard to a part of his conduct, and I have no doubt you will also concur in the same. I shall state what that part of his conduct is, and then proceed to detail his wrongs. The circumstance to which I allude is, that he married a minor, without the consent of her parents; this is the "head and front of his offending." I know that a person of the ability of the Attorney-General will not fail to make use of that circumstance for the purpose of prejudicing this gentleman; it is certainly a thing not to be commended or approved.

"Mr. Doherty's special pleader has, on this record, laid his damages at 20,000l. I do not ask of you to give him the whole 20,000l.; I consider the thing as the flourish of the special pleader, leaving it open for the Counsel of Mr. Doherty to treat the case freely and fairly. Recollecting what his Lordship said yesterday, I would wish to conduct the cause with the same candour and manliness as the learned advocate†, whose eloquent address drew forth the observation of his Lordship. I do not come here to ask, at your hands, what Mr. Philip William Wyatt ought to pay, for 20,000l. would then be too little; I do not ask or expect any thing like it. I tell you now, in the outset, that pecuniary damages are, as to their size, of no importance; pecuniary damages form the least of the considerations of a most honourable family, who are glad that the day is at length arrived, after a long day of darkness, in which this gentleman can meet his accusers, and invite, as a married man, the complete investigation of his conduct.

"Mr. Hugh Doherty is a native

* A brief account of the trial was given in our last Number, p. 249.

† Mr. Brougham, in his defence of the Proprietors of the Examiner.

of Ireland; at an early age he entered into his Majesty's service, and was an officer in the 25th light dragoons. He was about to take his departure to India, under the most flattering auspices, when, amusing himself previous to his embarkation at the places of fashionable resort, he was introduced to the lady who is his present wife, then Miss Holmes, the daughter of a person of that name, but who has since changed it for the name of Hunter. He was regularly introduced to her; he visited her and her family without any objection. It was not considered that there was any thing improper in their intercourse: I am ready to admit that, when the parents saw this acquaintance was ripening into affection on the part of the young lady, they objected to the match: Mr. Doherty was not a man of fortune, and Miss Holmes knew it. They were much attached to each other; she was a highly-gifted young woman, extremely qualified, and to the beauty of her person were added the accomplishments of a superior education. No man, who looked forward to the comfort and happiness of the married state, would hesitate in soliciting her for his wife; though, for the purpose of injuring this oppressed gentleman, the plaintiff, it has been thought fit to represent her as a fool and a mad woman. His addresses were not approved of by the family, yet this young woman was so enthusiastically in love with him, that it would form an entertaining novel to describe how her brain was continually at work for the purpose of contriving their union. Many must consider with surprise how such a thing could be carried into effect, in spite of the obstacles that opposed it: as to the means by which it was accomplished, she expresses herself in one of her letters which I have before me; she says, "All-powerful love was her director! Under the guidance of all-powerful love, she was determined that nothing but death should prevent her from marrying her dear, her beloved Hugh Doherty." Thus resolved, she on one occasion escaped from her father's house in order to find Mr. Doherty. She was taken, and carried back. When it was found impossible to subdue her affection for this gentleman, one strong recipe was resorted to,—she was conveyed to a mad-house, and there locked up. While she was there, the prevailing object of her affection occupied her whole attention; and I wish to God some of our unhappy countrymen, who are lingering out their lives in the prisons of the enemy, could contrive to deal with their keepers as this young person did with both of hers. She got into the good graces of one of the females who attended her: there were two of them. She conciliated the favour of one of these attendants; that was half the battle: she told her she must contrive to get two composing-draughts of two different qualities; one was to be capable of putting a person to sleep for twelve hours, and the other for ten hours only. Now, she said to her favourite attendant, "We will treat the ill-natured old devil (meaning her other attendant) with some porter; we shall then have two hours to make every thing ready for my escape. You shall then take your potion, which will put you to sleep for ten hours; I shall accomplish my purpose; you will both awake together, and you will find the bird flown." Would to God our countrymen in France could do so; she made made her escape accordingly, and on the 25th of May, 1802, she was married.

"Now, gentlemen, one of the grounds in which the claim of a plaintiff in this species of action, to recover any thing serious in the way of damages, is rebutted, sometimes is, that he has conducted himself ill towards his wife; that he has been an ill-tempered, unkind, disgusting husband. If causes could be disposed of by rumour, Mr. Doherty has no place of standing here, because, according to the accounts which have been given of this gentleman, when by the law of England he could give no answer to them, and when ex-parte articles of the peace were exhibited against him, which you know cannot be traversed or met by contrary affidavits, Mr. Doherty (and I speak it in as strong language as the Attorney-General can use) is a brute and a beast of a husband that ought never to shew his face again in society, as far as a man, conducting himself improperly in the character of a husband, ought to be excluded. If the accounts which have gone forth are to be believed, he is a man brutal in the extreme, violent in temper, treating his lady in a way which cannot be endured. These are the representations which have been made of him; these are the complaints which have been made to dissolve this marriage, in a court which has cognizance of such complaints. But I this day challenge my learned friend to prove that Mrs. Doherty, in any one moment of her life, had a right to complain of, or feel uneasy, at the conduct of her husband. I will not leave it to my learned friend to bring persons to prove he was a bad husband; I will bring forward witnesses until I weary you and his Lordship (if that is possible, for a court of justice is never impatient); I will call, till you are tired of hearing them, all the persons who had the capacity of knowing how he conducted himself. I shall not, as is frequently done in causes got up with considerable address, where a party goes for the whole 20,000*l.* for the seduction of his wife, call somebody who only saw them now and then in their holiday habit, but taking care at the same time not to call any who knew them in their hours of privacy and domestic retirement, lest, in their cross-examination, you should find something of displeasure at each other's conduct, something of mutual irritation that disturbs their connubial happiness.

"I will call to you every person in whose house Mr. Doherty ever lived with his wife, and every servant who ever lived with them, from the time of their marriage, with the exception of one Miss Hannah Flitt, who, I hope, will be called on the other side, that I may have the satisfaction of seeing her in the witness's box. My learned friend may cross-examine all, or any one of those I shall call, and I defy him to extract from one of them the slightest ground for supposing, that upon any one occasion there was a frown on the countenance of Mr. Doherty as addressed to this ungrateful wife of his.

"Gentlemen, some short time after their marriage, Mr. Doherty took his lady to Ireland, and introduced her to his family. They had no resentment against their relative on account of his union with this lady, but they thought the connection did not afford any very flattering hopes of much worldly prosperity. They thought, as he was an officer filling a respectable situation in the army, on the point of going out with his regiment to India, where, by his address and merit, he might have advanced himself in his honourable profession, to marry so young a lady with no large prospects of advantage, was not the most prudent step he could have taken. However, they received him and his bride with respect and attention. Mr. and Mrs. Doherty returned to England, and were reconciled to Mr. Hunter, the father of the lady. They went to Brighton, where they lived on the most affectionate and friendly terms with the family of Mr. Hunter. Nothing could be more cordial than the intercourse which subsisted between the two families at this time. Mr. Hunter had a considerable estate in Hertfordshire, where he occasionally resided, and as he was anxious to have his daughter and his son-in-law near him, Mr. Doherty took a cottage, called Laurel-lodge, in his neighbourhood. Here, gentlemen, is the scene of the commencement of all Mr. Doherty's misfortunes.

"Mr. and Mrs. Doherty went to reside at Laurel-Lodge in October, 1805; having lived happily together from the time of their marriage in May, 1802. I will not use cold expressions—to say they were a happy man and wife will not sufficiently express their felicity. Mr. Doherty was a most kind, attentive, and exemplary husband; his wife was happy in the extreme, and the birth of a son seemed, if possible, to have increased their reciprocal affection.

"They went, as I have observed, to live at Laurel-lodge; when, in an unfortunate and evil hour, Mr. Joseph Burke (an inmate in the family of Mr. Doherty) introduced the defendant to his house.

"The circle in which Mr. Doherty moved was circumscribed. I know the neighbourhood well. It is principally the residence of persons of rank and fortune, and strangers are not likely to get into an extensive circle of acquaintance. Mr. Wyatt was introduced by Mr. Burke to the family of Mr. Doherty. Mr. Wyatt is the son of a gentleman (I dare say, well known to you), the architect to his Majesty. He was a young man of pleasant manners, and he soon became domesticated at Laurel-lodge. For some time there was no reason to find the slightest ground for censure in any part of his conduct towards Mr. Doherty; he was attentive and civil—nothing more. I think, on the 25th of May, 1806, after they had been acquainted eight or nine months, Mrs. Doherty received an invitation from her mother, desiring her to come to London, and bring with her such change of linen as she might require for some time. There was no repugnance on the part of Mr. Doherty to this visit; he had no objection to his wife's paying obedience to the parental monition; and accordingly his friends, Mr. Wyatt and Mr. Burke, accompanied her to the house of her father in London, and there left her. From that hour to this Mrs. Doherty has never returned to her husband!!! but very soon after she had gone to London, Mr. Doherty, who had received some supplies of money from her father, which he had little reason to consider as a debt which could ever operate as a pressure upon him, was called upon to give some security, and at length he found himself arrested at the suit of Mr. Hunter, his father-in-law, for 1700l.; and not only for this debt, but actually taken into custody custody on articles of the peace exhibited against him on the part of his wife, alledging that she was apprehensive of some personal injury —some bodily harm from her husband!—her fond, affectionate husband!!!

"I hinted to you the nature of that proceeding: If any person will exhibit articles of the peace, which state that there is fair ground for apprehending personal danger to the life of the exhibitant, the law (for the sake of preventing the alledged danger) requires that, upon the mere exhibition of the articles, the party against whom they are preferred should enter into sureties to keep the peace: there is no investigation, no trial by jury, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is any foundation for the charge; there is no opportunity of explanation by witnesses, but, from the necessity of the case, the party must give security in such sum as the learned judges of the land, on the ex-parte statement of the facts, may think necessary. In consequence of these articles, and of the pretended debt, Mr. Doherty was arrested and confined, either in the King's Bench or in the rules of that prison, which were humanely and kindly permitted to him; there he was subjected to every degree of misery and uneasiness which can belong to such a situation. Often have I seen him coming to this place in term time, when he could procure a day-rule, attended by his interesting child, who, but for Mr. Philip Wyatt, would have been the heir of ample possessions, and, instead of being the companion of his oppressed father in a gaol, would have been brought up with all the advantages which belong to a finished education. Often have I seen him wishing to address the Court, but it could not be permitted to him to do so. In vain has he attempted to state and urge his wrongs! and I own I was one, who (as well as many of those who sit round me) did think I discovered in the demeanor of this gentleman a something which the enquiry of this day will sufficiently explain.

"Mr. Wyatt was the friend of Mr. Doherty; he was an inmate in his house, he was the protector of his wife when she went to visit her parents; but you will find that this same Mr. Wyatt is now living in open, avowed, undisguised, unconcealed, profligate adultery with her. This same Mr. Wyatt himself admits that he was the first person to go to Mr. Hunter, the father of Mrs. Doherty, and state that her husband treated her with brutality, and that it was impossible she could continue to live with him. This same Mr. Wyatt, when he had accomplished her removal from her husband's house, represented to the injured husband that he was acting as a friend, for the purpose of restoring him to his wife, with her own approbation and the approbation of her friends. This I shall shew to you, by his own letters, written after the wife of Mr. Doherty had left him, and when there is no doubt that he was engaged in his criminal design—whether he had accomplished it or not; for, till Mr. Doherty left Laurel-lodge, there is no suspicion that she had been guilty of infidelity to the bed of her husband, but where there is no doubt that this man was taking every opportunity of ingratiating himself in her favour, and forwarding those views upon her chastity which ended in an open, undisguised state of adultery.

"You will find this treacherous friend friend taking a lodging under a feigned name, and referring for his character to a respectable gentleman, who (I am persuaded) must have been surprised and imposed upon, or he would certainly not have stated, as he certainly did state, that the parties, with respect to whom he was referred to, were Mr. and Mrs. Daniel, knowing (as he must have known) that the pretended Mr. Daniel was no other than Mr. Wyatt, and that Mrs. Daniel was Mrs. Doherty! This however, he was induced to do, representing them as man and wife, in order that the person who applied to him might receive them into his house as lodgers. Gentlemen, it is one of the extraordinary circumstances of this case, that Mr. Wyatt and Mrs. Doherty, living in adultery, are attended by the female whose name I have already mentioned to you. I said I would call all the females who had ever lived in the service of Mr. and Mrs. Doherty from the time of their marriage, with the exception of Hannah Flitt. It is necessary I should tell you who she is, and that I should explain the meaning of the observation I made.

"Mrs. Doherty (under the auspices of Mr. Wyatt) has instituted a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, to be relieved from the obligation of her marriage, and she has instituted it under the complaint of cruelty and adultery on the part of Mr. Doherty—with whom do you think the adultery is alleged to have been committed?—why with Hannah Flitt!!! with Mrs. Doherty's waiting-maid!!! Will you believe it, gentlemen, that, when this cause stood for trial yesterday—that to-day, when it stood for trial, and when we were preparing to come into court to attend my Lord and you, Hannah Flitt, a person born at Barnet, is ushered out of a hackney-coach at the door of Westminster-Hall by a grave-looking gentleman. I should like to see a witness of this sort who is so attended; I own that the wife may expect to be relieved from her marriage, if such a witness as Hannah Flitt can stand one moment in your presence! Who is she?—She is the person who packs up the clothes when Mrs. Doherty is to pass for Mrs. Daniel!—she is the person, the convenient confidante, who laid the pillow when Mr. and Mrs. Daniel were consummating their crime. Hannah Flitt is the person with whom Mr. Doherty (it is said) has violated the duty of a husband. She is here to prove that, on some occasion, Mr. Doherty behaved with violence to his wife!!! If she does make such a statement, I am quite sure it will obtain no credit with you. I take it for granted she is here to prove something of that kind, for I cannot suppose she is brought here to prove her own criminal conversation.—It will be necessary for me to call the father of Mrs. Doherty, for it is also among the extraordinary circumstances of this case, that the carriage of the father has been seen constantly on a Sunday calling at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel, and taking them up, or any other gentleman who may happen to be there at the time! It drops the gentleman to make his Sunday calls, and then carries this married woman out of the adulterous bed to pass the day with her parents!!! and she is brought back to the same state of adultery by the parent's carriage in the evening!!!

"These are some of the extraordinary circumstances that mark this this most extraordinary case. I do not know what defence my learned friend will make. Will he bring any body also to prove that Mrs. Doherty has been unchaste with other persons besides Mr. Wyatt, and that therefore Mr. Doherty has lost little in losing such a wife? I am not sure that the fact is not so; I am not sure, if Hannah Flitt or some other witness should be examined, that it may not be found that Mr. Wyatt has not been the sole monopoliser of this lady's favors. What is that to me? she was chaste when he carried her away; and for all the consequences of her accumulated depravity and infamy he alone is answerable. I wish to God, that instead of having to pay for his crime the 20,000l. we have demanded of him, I was at this moment hearing the officer of the Court making proclamation; "If any one can inform our Lord the King, our Lord the King's justices, or our Lord the King's Attorney-General, of any crimes or misdemeanors whereof Philip William Wyatt stands accused, let him come forth and he shall be heard." I wish to God I could see him, after his conviction, brought up and standing on the floor to receive the judgment of the Court for his offence; I should then ask what sentence could be too severe upon a man, who had got into the bosom of a family living in peaceful and happy retirement,—who had persuaded an unsuspecting husband that he had not a better friend in the world—one more devoted to his service, or more disinterested in his professions,—who had gone clandestinely to the father and whispered base falsehoods in his ear as to the conduct of his son-in-law towards his daughter,—who had persuaded the mother to write to the wife of his friend to invite her to visit the mansion of her parents, intending that her visit should operate as an everlasting bar to her future union with her husband,—who had then debauched the wife, and placed her within the means of criminal access by other profligates as abandoned as himself;—I should be glad, I repeat, to have such a man presented before you upon an indictment, and brought up in some future term to receive in his own person the punishment justly due to such aggravated guilt.

PEDIGREE AND PERFORMANCES

Of that very favourite Mare,

PEWETT,

Bred by the Right Hon. Earl Fitzwilliam, and foaled in 1786.

PEWETT was got by Tandem; her dam by Tantram; grandam, Cantatrice, by Sampson; great grandam by Regulus, out of Old Marsk's dam, by Mr Hutton's Blacklegs, Bay Bolton, Fox Cub, Coneyskins, Mr. Hutton's Grey Barb, Royal Colt, Byerley Turk, from a Bustler mare.

Tandem was got by Syphon; his dam by Regulus, Old Snip, Cottingham, out of the Warlock Galloway, by Snake. He was a good runner, and when five years old, Mr. Shafto refused 1800gs. for him.—He also got Mr. Peirse's Rosamond, that bred Ferguson, Rosette, Delusion, Florival, Florette, &c.

Pewett's dam was never trained, but also bred Edmund, Snip, Evelina, Cecilia, Filbert, Stately, Sparrowhawk, &c.

Evelina is the dam of Orville, Louisa, Norval, (alias Sir Andrew), Delville, Cervantes, &c.

Cecilia is the dam of Fortuna, Whitenose, &c.

At Malton, May 5, 1789, Pewett won a Sweepstakes of 20gs. each, (7 Subscribers) one mile and a half, beating Bolus and Telescope:—Even betting on Pewett. At Doncaster, September 22, she won the St. Leger Stakes of 25gs. each, (9 Subscribers) two miles, beating Young Laurel, Bellona, Ostrich, Harold, &c.—Young Laurel came in first, but in consequence of a jostle, proved to have been given by his rider, Pewett was deemed the winner, and received the Stake.

At Malton, May 13, 1790, Pewett won a Sweepstakes of 10gs. each, (7 Subscribers) four miles, beating Speculator, Fanny, Greengage, &c.—Five and 6 to 4 against Pewett. At Doncaster, September 29, she beat Colonel Radcliffe's Bywell, (late Seducer) 8st. each, two miles, 100gs.:—Seven to 4 on Bywell.

At Wakefield, September 14, 1791, Pewett won 50l. four-mile heats, beating Sportsman, Rantaway, and Fox.

Pewett is now a Brood-Mare, in Earl Fitzwilliam's Stud, and is the dam of the celebrated runners Sir Paul, and Paulina.

DEATH OF THE DUKE OF GRAFTON.

THE venerable and much-respected Duke of Grafton departed this life on Thursday, the 14th instant, at Euston Hall, Suffolk, where his Grace had been long in a declining state. He was in the 76th year of his age. By his death become vacant the Chancellorship of the University of Cambridge, and a Ribbon of the Order of the Garter. He was also Governor of the ports in Cornwall and Devon, Receiver General of the Profits of the Seals in the King's Bench and Common Pleas, and of the Prisage of Wines, &c. &c.—His Grace is succeeded by his eldest son, the Earl of Euston (now Duke of Grafton), in consequence of which a vacancy has taken place in the Parliamentary Representation of the University of Cambridge, for which his Lordship was one of the Members.

As his Grace was of the first order of nobility, so he was of the first order of sportsmen. A portrait of this nobleman was given in our Magazine for June, 1807, with a few particulars of his character as a sportsman; and in the Sporting Magazine for September in the same year, under the head, "Duke of Grafton's Stud," will be found an article occupying near six pages, containing a "List of horses names"—"by whom got"—"Dams and what got by" "years foaled in," &c.

BURTON HUNT.

ON Saturday, February 23, Mr. Osbaldeston's hounds met at Hackthorn Gorse, where they soon found, and ran a remarkably fine burst of fifty-five minutes, in which, after taking a ring down to Cold Hanworth and Spridlington, they brought the fox back to the cover where he was found, and killed him handsomely.—They then rode over to Dunholm Corner, where they soon found a second fox, which led them a chase of an hour and three quarters, taking a circle towards Dunholm and Welton, and run-running back through the cover; he broke away over the Heath in a line with Aisthorpe and Brattleby, and ran down into Scampton village, where, after some cool hunting, in which the steadiness of these excellent hounds was very apparent, they carried the scent up to the Hedge-row, in which the fox was reposing, whence he again broke away in view of the whole pack, and after a burst of about eight miles was run into in the middle of a field, and killed in a capital style; thus finishing two severe chases in one day, and killing in the most sporting-like manner both their foxes. And on Tuesday, the 26th (from Stainfield Hall), they killed their fox after a severe run of two hours. From the pace these hounds ran, and from passing through some woods, it is supposed they changed foxes. On Thursday, the 28th, from (Somerby Hall) after a most excellent run of one hour and fifty minutes, over one of the most beautiful grass countries in England, they ran into their fox by the Trent side of the North Park. On Saturday, March 2d, from Hatton Wood, after a killing run of two hours and a half over a similar country, they ran into their fox in an open field near Stixwold; the greatest part of this run was excessively sharp, and in the latter part the hounds displayed that superior hunting which characterises them. On the Monday following, from Gotho Hall, they had a run of one hour and twenty minutes over an equally beautiful country, and killed their fox in an open field near Wissington. On the next Tuesday, at Spittal, these excellent hounds were met by Mr. Pelham, Sir H. Nelthorpe, Mr. Nelthorpe, the Mr. Appleby's, and about thirty other gentlemen from Lord Yarborough's Hunt: they tried Spittal Gorse, and found; the fox made immediately for an adjacent farm yard, and was quickly killed. It was discovered that he was lame, and could not get away. They next tried Hemswell Gorse, and a fox immediately broke away over Hemswell new inclosure. From twice being headed, and from the dryness of this high country, there was a check or two of about ten minutes, but the steadiness of the hounds enabled them to recover this disadvantage, and after running two miles got upon good terms with the fox, and ran him sharply over the dry heath, crossed the Barton Road into Atterby, then turned to the right, ran for Bishop Norton, through the late Mr. Harrison's plantations, across his park, and doubled again for Atterby Field; crossed the Barton Road, running parallel with it for about two miles, then turned to the left and made for Bleborough. He immediately made down the Cliff, and turned to the right below Grayingham, taking a direct line for the low grounds of Kirton; here the sportsmen viewed him making the best of his road up the hill again short of Kirton town; crossed Kirton new inclosure and was making for Redburn Plantations; but his strength failing him, he threaded the hedges at the low end of Kirton field, and was pulled down about a quarter of a mile short of Redburn open field, after a run of one hour and forty minutes. The excellence of these hounds, and superiority of management, were evidently manifest during the whole of the day; and the gentlemen of Lord Yarborough's Hunt returned home most highly gratified with the day's sport.

N. B. These hounds, ever since the

the first frost at the beginning of January, have had equal weeks of diversion, with the exception only of two days on the Newark side, and one on the Branston side of their country. It is universally allowed by all the sportsmen who have hunted with the Burton hounds, that no pack ever had such sport. It is very remarkable, but very true, that the last three months (with the exception of the three before-mentioned days) this pack has had daily runs from twenty-five minutes to nearly three hours each, always killing the fox; they have frequently had two runs in a day, and scarcely ever failed of killing both their foxes.

RABY HUNT.

LORD Darlington's pack of hounds, had a most extraordinary and severe run on Monday, the 25th ult.—The fox broke away from "Brafferton Spring" over a wide range of country, and at last took a Rock on Hambleton Hill, well known by the name of "The Rouston Scar," not far distant from the famous precipice of "The White Mare of Whiston Cliff."—At this, as we may truly say, tremendous and dreadful hanging crag! the fox, disdainful as it were of his pursuers, got into the rock, and "sav'd his forfeited head."—This day's sport will ever be remembered by the gentlemen who compose the RABY HUNT, for though cut on their famed and high-bred hunters, it was in vain to follow:—The scene,—the beautiful view from this high elevation,—the confusion in the deep vale below,—brings to our recollection a similar description by the hunting Muse of our favourite poet Somerville:

" ———— View how far behind
" The hunter crew, wide straggling o'er the plain!
" The panting courser now with trembling nerves
" Begins to reel; urg'd by the goring spur
" Makes many a faint effort; he snorts, he foams;
" The big round drops run trickling down his sides,
" With sweat and blood distain'd. Look back and view
" The strange confusion of the vale below,
" Where sour vexation reigns: see yon poor jade;
" In vain th' impatient rider frets and swears,
" With galling spurs harrows his mangled sides;
" He can no more: his stiff unpliant limbs
" Rooted in earth, unmov'd and fix'd he stands,
" For ev'ry cruel curse returns a groan,
" And sobs, and faints, and dies."

On Tuesday, the 5th instant, the above hounds (Lord Darlington's,) threw off at Holling Head Wood, where, after trying a few coverts, a most gallant fox broke from Whixley Whin, and ran about a mile in the direction of Masham; he then made a short turn to the left, and came round by the edge of the Moors to Grantley, and leaving Grantley Hall on the right, made for Spa Gill; from thence by Aldfield to Fountains Abbey, where he entered Studley Park, and making many a mazy turn, amused his pursuers by showing them the beauties of that enchanting place; here finding artifice would not avail, he again broke away, and returning by Spa Gill to Grantley, sought refuge on the banks of the Laver; the hounds close following, he ran to Holling Head Wood, where he broke cover;—crossed the river,—and leaving Azerley Hall on the right,—passed Golah village to Whixley, thence —thence by Kirby Malzeard to the banks of the Ure, below Hackfall. —There only the chosen few arrived,—who, "eagerly pursuing," chased him with "loud halloos" and "cheering horn," through this romantic spot.—He crossed the river, and made for Peter Wood, where turning to the left, he passed by Aldbrough and Masham, when his strength failed him; the hounds ran gallantly into him at view, and killed him at High-Burton.—— Only two of the sportsmen got to the end of this severe chase—Lord Darlington and Mr. Wentworth.

The chase was at least sixteen miles, in a direct line from where the fox was found, and must, by the ground he took, have exceeded thirty miles. This gallant chase lasted with high blood, gallant spirits, and exhilirating cheers, three hours and twenty-five minutes.

PROSECUTIONS
FOR
BREACHES OF THE GAME LAWS.

AT the Hants Assizes, held at Winchester, March the 9th, 1811, a cause was tried—Burnett v. Poole.—This action was brought against Mr. Poole, of Winchester, for an alledged trespass on the grounds of Mr. Burnett, a tenant of Lord Temple's. Two of his Lordship's game-keepers swore to the best of their belief that Mr. Poole was following some hounds on the grounds alledged, on the 9th of last December; but Mr. Poole produced two gentlemen, who proved that he was not out with the hounds on that day; upon which the Judge stopped the cause, saying, that in his opinion a verdict must be for the defendant, and on Mr. Poole's counsel saying that he had proof of the place where he was at the time sworn to by the game-keepers, the cause was given up by the plaintiff's counsel.

At the same assizes, Joseph Stride and George Soffe were committed to the county gaol for six months imprisonment, for taking a deer from a walk in the New Forest.

At the Essex Assizes, held at Chelmsford, March the 14th, 1811, a cause was tried—Lord Braybrooke v. Peachey.—This was an action of trespass, for entering his Lordship's pheasant preserve, at Saffron Walden, and disturbing the birds. The defendant was a young lad, the son of a neighbouring brazier, who had often been trespassing in his Lordship's grounds, from which he had been warned by the game-keeper; and after that warning, at the end of April last, he was discovered in an ozier inclosure, kept paled up for the breeding of pheasants, beating the oziers, apparently with the view of discovering the pheasants nests.—The Jury found for the plaintiff—Damages one shilling.

A person was convicted during the last month (before the Magistrates at Doncaster) in the penalty of 5l. for coursing without a qualification, and in the further penalty of 20l. for coursing without having taken out a game certificate. For the defendant it was unsuccessfully contended, that he was coursing with, and therefore protected by, the qualification and certificate of a qualified person.—For the information of the sporting part of the community, we take this opportunity to mention, that according to a late decision, confirmed by the opinions of some of the most eminent counsel at the Bar,

Bar, qualified persons cannot legally employ others who are unqualified, or who have not taken out their game certificates, to beat or range for game, unless such persons are bona fide their menial servants.

On Thursday, the 21st instant, Richard Cozen, W. Cozen, John Emiley, and John Stokes, were brought in the custody of Adkins and Vickery, to the Police Office, Bow-street, charged with violently assaulting John Stevenson, the gamekeeper of Charles Rose Ellis, Esq. of Esher, in Surrey, while in the execution of his duty.—It appeared that the prisoners are Brentford fishermen: about a fortnight since, early in the morning, they, in company with several others, went to Esher for the purpose of dragging a very excellent fish-pond, belonging to Mr. Ellis. They met another party of fishermen on the spot, who had come for the same purpose. They disputed for some time which of the parties should drag the pond; and not being able to agree, they actually fought about it. The noise which they made disturbed the gamekeeper, who got up, and went and endeavoured to drive them away. They, however, were so numerous and daring, that they attacked him, deprived him of his gun, knocked him down, and threw him into a ditch and left him there. The prisoners being identified to be of the party, were ordered to find bail to answer the charge at the Assizes.

At the Dorset Assizes, J. Whitmarsh was tried for entering West Walk, in Cranborne Chase, with intent to kill deer, and beating and wounding the keeper, and found guilty, and sentenced to be transported for seven years.

Shooting on prohibited manors produces as deadly feuds in Germany as in this country. An Officer at Prague, passionately fond of the sports of the field, persevered in shooting in a forest from which he had been repeatedly warned.—He one day sent his servant in pursuit of game, who was met by the son of the game-keeper, and ordered to desist: the servant levelled his piece at him, but missing his aim, was shot dead in return: the officer, when informed of the event, armed himself, and hastened to the game-keeper's, whose son he killed: the afflicted father, rendered furious by despair, took a loaded pistol, and shot the assassin through the heart.—The game-keeper is arrested, and a process commenced against him—curiosity is excited to know what judgment will be pronounced.

ROYAL HUNT.

ON Saturday, March the 23d, one of his Majesty's stags was turned out at Buck-hill. He took his course across the Forest to Windsor; run to the market, where he was turned up by the Church into St. Alban's-street, passed Augusta Lodge, turned down Park-hill, into Peascod-street, turned to Cluver, crossed the Thames over to the Brockhouse-field, where he was pinned by a bull-dog, and would have killed him had not one of the yeoman prickers come up in time to extricate the stag from him; he ran into a pond, and the hounds coming up surrounded him, and he was there taken. The stag was very much torn by the bull-dog, which spoiled the day's sport.

FEAST OF WIT.

A Recruit, who had enlisted in one of the marching regiments, was last week brought for inspection to Lieutenant-Colonel Lindsay, who presides over the recruiting department in Dublin. The man's appearance was not flattering to his new profession, and Colonel Lindsay could not help remarking, on his requesting to be made a grenadier, that he was too low, and besides in-kneed. "'Tis low enough with me, please your honour," replied the recruit, "and I'm in need too, for by J—s I have not had a meal these three days."

THE following laconic reply was recently sent in answer to a love epistle, full of hearts and darts, that was written by a fortune hunter to Miss W——, of the Circus, Bath:

"You silly Fop, I know your thoughts,
"You don't love me, you love my groats!"

A YOUNG fellow asked a gentleman in St. George's-fields, "which was the best way to go to the King's-Bench," to which the other drily replied, "the usual way was in a tandem, gig, or curricle!"

THE Hampshire auctioneer, who recovered 100l. damages against his friend qui tam, at the Winchester Assizes, wisely placed his washer-woman under the bed; by which he ascertained that his frail rib had so far plunged herself into the suds of infidelity, as to be no longer worthy of remaining a lot in the catalogue of his conjugal items.

An African Black has been taken into custody in Ireland, on suspicion of being an Irish White-boy!

EPIGRAM—FAT AND LEAN.

A lusty dame (some vulgar Poll)
Before Ned took her station,
He, to make room, was forced to loll
In painful situation.

Soon with a bow he doff'd his hat,
And said the acts between;
Pray let me change my place—your fat
Good Madam, makes me lean.

J.

ON TOM, A DYER.

Strange was the destiny, thought I,
That Fate to Tom did give;
That while all others live to die,
He only dyes to live. C. T.

LATELY, in Shropshire, a gentleman observed two sailors very busy in lifting an ass over the wall of a pound, where it was confined. On asking the reason, the tars, with true humanity of character, made the following reply:—"Why, lookee master, we saw this here animal aground, without victuals, d'ye see, and so my messmate and I agreed to cut his cable, and give him liberty, because we have known before now, what it is to be at short allowance."

So many petitions have been presented to the House of Commons this Session, in favour of new canals and cuts, that if but half be granted, granted, a very important alteration must be made on the face of the country. Like Holland, it will become a series of ditches and dykes, and all our landed interest will be converted into a floating property!

Such is the astonishing rage at present for adventuring in water works, that some of the dashing speculators, before it is long, are likely to be seized with the hydrophobia!

A gentleman of the sister kingdom, lately gave an extraordinary price at a sale in the city, for an alarm clock; assigning as a reason, that he loved to rise early, and should now have nothing to do but to pull the string, and he could wake himself!

Depraved Wit.—A swaggering blade, in that predicament which Hudibras compares to a mouse-trap, and who made the amende honourable, by having his name inserted in a certain state catch-penny, lately went into a hair-dresser's shop, dressed in the first stile of buckism—in black—and was accosted by the shaver in an enquiry, who he was in mourning for?—"Oh! Damme! (says Jumps,) don't you know?—who I'm in mourning for, my creditors to be sure!"

New Method of Teaching Music. A Highland Piper having a scholar to teach, disdained to crack his brains with the names of semibreves, minims, crotchets, and quavers. "Here, Donald! (said he,) take your pipes, lad, and give us a blast. So!—very well blown indeed! But what is sound, Donald, without sense? You may blow for ever without making a tune of it, if I do not tell you how the queer things on the paper must help you. You see that fellow with a round open face (pointing to a semibreve between the two lines of a bar;) he moves slowly from that line to this, while you beat one with your foot, and take a long blast; if now you put a leg to him, you make two of him, and he will move twice as fast; if you blacken his face, he will run four times faster than the first fellow with the white face; but if, after blacking his face, you bend his knee, or tie his legs, he will hop you still eight times faster than the white-faced fellow I shewed you first. Now whene'r you blow your pipes, Donald, remember this, the tighter those fellows' legs are tied, the faster they will run, and the quicker they are sure to dance."

Extraordinary Sale.—A few days since, a most extraordinary sale took place, at the White-hart, Sittingbourne:—A woman, of the name of Coveney, was led by a halter into one of the rooms, and sold to the highest bidder, together with five children, a horse and cart, and all her household furniture. A man at Newington was the purchaser, for the sum of ten pounds.

The "Annals of Austrian Literature" mention, that the late D. Christian, Dean of the Faculty of Canon Law at Vienna, has bequeathed the sum of 6000 florins for the maintenance of his three dogs, during their natural lives; and after the death of the said three dogs, or the longest liver of them, this sum is to fall into the funds of the University of Vienna.

EPIGRAM ON A MISER.

Strange tho' it seem—a miser you will find
Most generous by far of all mankind;
Others

Others their riches on themselves employ,
While he keeps his for others to enjoy.
C. T.

A PARTY of amateur performers, who represented on the 13th of February, at the Plymouth Theatre, for a charity, Otway's Orphan, after the curtain had dropped, sent Monimia forward to sing Gee ho, Dobbin, with her dress unchanged, to the great amusement of the audience, who had a minute or two before seen her tragically expire.

WHEN Dr. Johnson, on some occasion, was musing over a fire in a drawing room at Streatham, a young gentleman called to him suddenly, perhaps disrespectfully: "Mr. Johnson, would you advise me to marry?" Johnson replied, in an angry tone, "I would advise no man to marry who is not likely to propagate understanding."

Blue Beard the Rage!!! or the Critics versus the Manager of Covent Garden Theatre.—A selection of paragraphs from the diurnal prints of this month.

Mr. Kemble, whose library has been so much admired for its richness in classics and dramatic poetry, is now collecting books on Farriery! The latter collection will qualify him for being the Manager of the Covent-Garden horses!

In one of our Theatres, the old inscription of "Veluti in speculum" is to be changed to "Good entertainment for man and horse."

The horses in Blue Beard, from their being such favourites, have acquired the appellation of hobby-horses.

Those who think with Falstaff that "the better part of valour is discretion," may see all the bustle and glory of a battle, "horse and foot," in Blue Beard, without the danger of a fall or a bullet.

One of the horses that perform in Blue Beard, at Covent-Garden Theatre, having misbehaved at rehearsal, a few days since, was fined by the Manager a peck of oats.

It is generally supposed, from the great success of the new performers at Covent-Garden Theatre, that horses were the original performers on the stage, and that the green-room originally meant a grass plat.

There is one strong recommendation to the Managers of Covent-Garden Theatre, to engage horses to perform, as they will never complain with respect to their cast of parts!

The success of Blue Beard, was formerly attributed to the interesting lock in the Blue Chamber; the success of its revival depends upon another lock—the fetlock.

The Labours of Hercules might be properly represented, as a grand ballet, at Covent-Garden Theatre, particularly as the Managers must now be well provided with stables.

EPIGRAM ON BLUE BEARD.

No wonder that nightly such companies press,
And for places "'tis catch as catch can;"
The reason is clear, and all must confess,
That a horse will draw more than a man.

In all disputes between Managers and Players, the advantage has hitherto been on the side of the former: but with respect to the new performers at Covent-Garden the case is somewhat different, and if the Manager does not take care of what he is about, he may chance to be kicked!

It is very fortunate that the O. P. war has terminated in a lasting peace. How dreadful the consequences if cavalry had been employed!

A LETTER from a British Officer in Portugal gives the following explanation of a late mission from Massena to Lord Wellington:— The French Commander, intending to fire a feu de joie on receiving intelligence of the birth of the Imperial issue of the marriage of Napoleon and Maria Louisa, sent to acquaint Lord Wellington, "in order," as the French Officer said, "that Lord Wellington should not be alarmed." Lord Wellington received the Officer very politely, and sent back an assurance to Marshal Massena, "that although no fire from the French lines could alarm him, he was so much obliged by the politeness of his communication, that as it was probable the first intelligence of the event, upon which the feu de joie was to take place, would reach Portugal from England, he would not lose a moment in conveying it to the French camp."

WE give the following account of the trial of a cause at the Kent Assizes, under this head, by reason of the drollery of the circumstances stated by the defendant's counsel.

Smith v. Russel.—This was an action to recover damages for an assault. Mr. Garrow opened the case with great gravity, and stated that the plaintiff was a medical gentleman of considerable talents, who had settled at Dover with a view of obtaining practice in that town. The defendant was a publican resident there, and it happened that he had a servant who was afflicted with the itch. His client was called in, and cured her, for which he of course expected due payment. The defendant's wife, however, most egregiously abused the plaintiff, and on a subsequent day, the defendant drove his elbow into the plaintiff's stomach, so as to hurt him very much; and again assaulted him upon another occasion.

Two witnesses proved the assault first stated, that the defendant thrust his elbow in Doctor Smith's stomach, but negatived the latter assault.

On cross-examination, they said they did not know how Doctor Smith became a doctor; he gave physic to the people at Dover, but he might be nothing more than a Surgeon.

Mr. Serjeant Shepherd, to prove the Doctor's literature, produced his bills, a paper which had been proved by one of the witnesses, and which began as follows:—To markurell anintement for curing the owld sarvante of the hitch." He also stated, that the plaintiff had indicted the defendant at the Dover Sessions, and when examined there on his oath, a learned friend asked the Doctor where he got his diploma? When his answer literally was, that he got his deplorer of the Mayor of Guernsey. Deplorable it was, indeed, that such a fellow should go about poisoning his Majesty's subjects; but he trusted the Jury would mark their opinion of him and his action by a farthing damages, or if they went further, it would be to give "the knave a groat."—Verdict for plaintiff—Damages ONE FARTHING.

A POOR Frenchman, belonging to one of the Prison Theatres, beginning to translate Cibber's Comedy of "Love's Last Shift," wrote "La Derniere Chemise de l'Amour."

SPORT-

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

NORBROOK Races will take place on Wednesday, the 3d of April, when great sport is expected; three horses being already entered for the Gold Cup, value 100gs.—Five horses for the 10gs. Cup and 40gs. in specie.—And six horses for the sweepstakes.—A match will be run between Sir Thomas Mostyn's Pegasus, and Mr. Cope's Shoestrings, for 100gs. h. ft.

LORD Middleton, we are informed, intends giving a Plate, at the end of the season, to be run for by those horses which shall have been rode to his hounds, since his Lordship has hunted in Warwickshire.

MR. Osbaldeston is going to revive the Burton Hunt Races.—Tuesday, the 16th of April, is fixed for the present year.

CAPTAIN Mellish, formerly of high turf celebrity, is promoted to a Majority in the line.

MR. Corbet's valuable stud of horses, twelve in number, were sold at Stratford-upon-Avon, lately;—two of them fetched 250 guineas each, and the whole brought upwards of 1220 guineas.

WE understand that Capt. A—r, and several other persons of fashion, have taken Parsloe's House, in St. James's-street, to establish a new club.

Newmarket Levanter!—A dashing Captain made a bolt from the Turf, at Newmarket, a few days since, after extracting the Spanish from all his sporting acquaintance, who would stand the Nonsense, by the way of a Loan for his Ways and Means! He was pursued as far as Birmingham; but he eluded the chase, and is now, it is believed, safely nestled in the Isle of Man! "Plague on it, when men of honour won't be true to each other."

SUCH inhabitants of Bath as remember the gaiety and splendour of that city during its race weeks, will be happy to hear that it is in contemplation to revive the sports of the turf in the course of this year. The three Noblemen and Gentlemen's Clubs have resolved to make up three subscription purses; and other measures are about to be adopted that may either insure an early return of fashionable visitors, or establish such a variety of attractive summer amusements as may prevent their emigrating to other watering places.

ON Wednesday, the 27th ult. Mr. Durand, of Carshalton, Surrey, gave his last day's coursing at Epsom Downs for this season, to a few of his friends, amongst whom was a gentleman from Hertfordshire, who brought some very good greyhounds. There were many good matches, and the hares ran remarkably well. There was one course in particular which afforded much sport: for after thirty or forty turns, the hare beat the dogs, in consequence of their being quite exhausted; both of them dropping down during the course, and were unable to pursue their object any farther. Mr. Durand's old favourite bitch, which is between eight and nine years old, ran one course with one of her pups, and killed the hare in great style, to the surprise of the sportsmen present.—The coursing gentlemen are much indebted to Mr. Durand, for his goodness in affording them excellent sport during the coursing season, he being the only sporting gentleman within many miles of the place who allows coursing in so handsome a manner.

MERE-DOWN Coursing Meeting was well attended on Friday, March 1st.—The hares were plenty, and ran well.—The long depending match between a dog belonging to a gentleman of high estimation in the coursing line, and Mr. Corner's brown bitch, was, after two days' contention, won by the latter.

A GRAND match of pigeon shooting, at twenty-one birds, took place on Tuesday, the 19th instant, at Ripley Common, between two expert shots, whose names are Keene and Elliot. The match was for fifty guineas, and Keene killed twenty birds, which beat his adversary by one.

The Four-in-Hand Club.—The first Spring Meeting of this celebrated Association of Charioteers will be held in Cavendish-square, about the middle of April next. The following is a list of the Members who are expected to attend:—

1. Mr. Charles Buxton (Leader).
2. Lord Hawke.
3. Sir John Rogers.
4. Captain Agar.
5. Sir Bellingham Graham.
6. Hon. Martin Hawke.
7. Mr. Humphrey Butler.
8. Mr. M'Quin.
9. Mr. Thornhill.
10. Sir J. Lade (new Member.)
11. Captain Murray (ditto).
12. Captain Ackers.
13. Mr. Harrison.
14. Mr. Sherrard (new Member).
15. Mr. Stephen Atkinson.
16. Major Pelly (new Member).
17. Mr. Morgan.

Many of the vehicles will be new; the form, a landau-vis, painted a bright yellow, and hung high, with arms and crests on the door pannels. In the harness, the Buxton-bit, Hawke-head-territt, the Butler-bearing-hook, and the Rogers-ring, will be as much in vogue. Arms and crests, richly embossed, will be introduced on the winkers, pads, nose-bands, and breast-plates. The scroll-ornaments, in chased-work, are discontinued to be used on the hame-tugs; scollop-shells are substituted. Ribbon-fronts are more in request than those of brass or silver; and breechings are wholly exploded.

The dress this year will be blue coats, buff waistcoats, and the white Regent's-cord breeches; hats with a conical crown and very narrow rim. Great coats, without capes, well padded about the shoulders to turn off the rain; the colour a fawn or light drab; buttons plain.

FRIDAY, February 22, a long depending trotting match took place between Hampton-Court and Kingston, distance one mile, for fifty guineas, between Mr. Goldsmith's famous trotter, and Mr. Clifton's, of Ham Common, which was won by the former by nearly a quarter of a mile.

ON Monday, the 4th instant, a trot-trotting match took place on the Newmarket road, from the fifth mile-stone to the fourth, between a mare, the property of Mr. Barnes, of Eaton, and a horse, the property of a person at Weston. The mare was the winner.

MONDAY, the 4th instant, the match between Mr. Maule and Mr. Bray, four miles on Epsom Race Course, 140 guineas against 100, was decided in favour of Mr. M. having beat his antagonist by about half a length. Even betting the first three and a half miles.

THE renowned Matt Milton, of equestrian notoriety, seems determined to ascertain the quickness of the whole of the quadruped breed. He officiated as steward of a Rat Race, at a public-house in Shepherd's Market, on Thursday, the 14th instant, where four of these vermin, decorated with different coloured ribbands, were started for a sweepstakes of no inconsiderable sum, round a club-room, in the presence of a host of sportsmen. The first was a dead heat, one of the favourites having bolted!

WE understand that the above Mr. Milton has made a match for seven hundred guineas to drive four in hand, fifteen miles in forty-eight minutes; to start the week before Epsom races commence, and to be done within twenty miles of London. Betting is against the undertaking.

Match against Time.—A horse dismissed from the artillery, on account of old age, and a complication of diseases, and purchased by a miller in the neighbourhood of Barton, was matched to run on Thursday, the 21st of February, from the White Swan Inn, Barton, to Elsham Hall, and back again, a distance of twelve miles, within the hour, for a wager of six guineas. Previous to starting, curiosity drew many persons to the place of setting off, and the faculties of all were uncommonly excited by his uncouth appearance, which fell nothing short of his celebrated progenitor, Rosinante. After having undergone the scrutiny of the knowing ones, they declared it a vain attempt, and the veterinary surgeon pronounced Rosinante so knocked up, that it was impossible he could perform the task. Rosinante, however, after a hearty breakfast of bran, set off, under not very favourable auspices, which caused considerable bets that he did not even return. About the proposed time of his re-appearance, several spectators assembled against the Wheat Sheaf, when lo! Rosinante arrived amidst universal cheers, which he mistaking for a shout of victory, suddenly halted, to the great inconvenience and peril of his rider. Being convinced of his mistake by the application of several cudgels, he proceeded, and passed the White Swan Inn, having been only fifty-five minutes in performing the distance, to the great astonishment of many confident sporting amateurs.—Leeds Intel.

BOXING.—A pitched battle was fought on Monday, March 4, in Tothill-fields, between two countrymen of the names of John Ward and Thomas Jackson, for eight guineas aside. The bets on setting to were six to four in favour of Ward; but after the fifth round the bets were even. The sixth round Ward hit Jackson a violent blow under the ear, which brought brought him to the ground, when bets became in favour of Ward, and the seventh round six to four on Ward; when after twenty-five uncommonly hard-fought rounds, victory was declared in favour of John Ward. The battle lasted thirty-five minutes.

On Sunday, the 17th instant, a contest took place at the Half-way house, between Minster and Sheerness. A well-known character, belonging to Sheerness, and a contract-rigger, fought a pitched battle for five guineas a side: they displayed their abilities while the people were going to church; and had seventy-five rounds, which lasted two hours—the former came off victorious.

Another black, who promises to become as formidable as the renowned Molineux, exhibited against a professor of the name of Coney, at Shipton Heath, a few miles from Oxford, on Monday, the 18th, for a stake of fifty guineas, and a purse of twenty. The black, whose name is Mahone, is possessed of strength equal to Molineux, and he combated a man who had won eleven successive battles. Seventeen sanguinary rounds were fought, and although Coney was a six-feet pugilist of proportionate strength, the hardihood and bottom of the black got him the victory, after he had been hit about the head until every feature was imperceivable. He did not display that quickness which practice will gift him with, but he was always fighting, and at the latter part of the contest, he succeeded in hitting away his adversary's science, and he planted terrific hits until Coney was taken off the ground more beat than is usual in modern boxing. The winner is a musician, born in England of African parents. He is under the protection of a country 'Squire, of the name of Stanton, and is equal to Horton, the pugilist.

Thursday, the 21st instant, a desperate pugilistic contest took place in Spa-fields, between Soapy Daw, James Vickery, and William Diaper, for a purse of twenty guineas, the former undertaking to fight the two latter. At setting to bets were five to two against Daw. The first round very cautious sparring took place, when Daw received a violent blow on the left eye, and closed—bets at this time were eight to one. The second round Daw commenced a rally, and knocked both his antagonists to the ground—bets now in favour of Daw. Third round, Daw shewed play in setting to, knocked one down, and giving the other a cross buttock, made him turn a White-lock. Fourth round Daw became fresh, and shewed much scientific skill by knocking his opponents down, and became victorious.—Daw promises to become a good second rater.

The Lancashire man, who has been brought to London by Gregson, has challenged any man in England, with the exception of three, to combat at any notice. He is a fine young man, and bids fair to become formidable amongst the fighting men of the present day.

The renowned Molineux, who has challenged all the world, has at length met an adversary in the person of the above Lancashire Man, produced by Gregson, who was brought to town to enter the fighting lists, but who has never yet yet been tried in London, although he has been a terror in the country. The match is for two hundred guineas, twenty forfeit—the money to be made good on the 16th of April, and the battle to be fought on the 7th of May.—Betting six to four on Molineux.

PEDESTRIANISM.—On Saturday, the 2d instant, a man of the name of John Ricketts undertook to go nine miles in one hour, seventeen miles in two hours, and twenty-four miles in three hours. The scene of performance was in the Denjohn-field, Canterbury. The ground being measured for the purpose, the pedestrian started at two o'clock, and performed the nine miles within three minutes and a half of the first hour, the seventeen miles within one minute and a half of the two hours, and the twenty-four miles within one minute and a half of the three hours, during which he turned one hundred and fourteen times.——Bets nearly to 600l. it is said, were depending on the match. Many of the knowing ones were taken in, as the man who had undertaken the feat, at the expiration of the second hour, pretended to faint from fatigue, and carried on the farce so well, that the odds were a guinea to a shilling against his completing the task. An immense concourse of spectators were present.

MR. Oliver, who started on Friday, the 15th instant, to go to Blandford and return (two hundred miles) in fifty hours, for two hundred guineas, resigned the task in the neighbourhood of Overton, Hants, on the Saturday afternoon. He went the first one hundred miles in twenty-six hours, and continued his task to Overton at a losing rate. When he resigned, he had fifty-six miles to perform in eight hours.

MR. Jamieson, well known in the annals of pedestrianism, undertook on Wednesday, the 13th instant, to go from Holborn Bridge to St. George's Church, in the Borough, and back again, in twenty minutes, and which he accomplished in two minutes less than the given time. The wager was for two guineas, and several bets were depending on the issue.

MR. Robert Hopper, of Canterbury, who engaged to go sixty-three miles in twelve successive hours, started on Saturday morning, the 16th instant, from the turnpike at St. Martin's Hill, and after much perseverance and apparent labour, accomplished his undertaking within twenty-one minutes and a quarter of the given time. The following is the account of his performance, as reported by the umpires:—At the end of the 1st hour, he had gone $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles; 2d hour, 11 miles (including breakfast); 3d hour and 5 minutes, 20 miles; 4th hour, 26 miles; 5th hour, 34 miles; 6th hour, 35 miles (including dinner); 7th hour, 41 miles; 8th hour, 45 miles; 9th hour, 51 miles; 10th hour, 55 miles; 11th hour, 60 miles; and at $38\frac{3}{4}$ minutes past the 11th hour, 63 miles.—Mr. Hopper conceives he could have completed 67 miles in the 12 hours.

MR. Walters, the famous pedestrian, has undertaken to walk, for a considerable wager, from London to Holyhead, a distance of two hundred and seventy-six miles, in four days and a half, to be performed the latter end of this month.

A PER-

A PERSON of the name of Adams, who undertook for a wager of ten guineas, to run from the Market-place, at Dover, to the Cattle Market, at Canterbury, in two hours, (a distance of sixteen miles,) performed the task, on Tuesday, the 19th instant, between the hours of ten and twelve, in four minutes less than the limited time; and with so little fatigue, that he offered for a wager, to return back to Dover within two hours in the course of the same day.

ON Monday, the 4th inst. while Mr. Dowle, jun. son of Mr. Dowle, of Oxenham, Gloucestershire, was out shooting, in passing through a hedge, with the butt-end of his gun advanced before him, something caught the trigger, when the piece exploded, and the whole of the charge entered his breast, some of it passing through the back part of his shoulder. Although so dreadfully injured, he contrived to walk home, where surgical assistance was procured, and he underwent a very painful operation for the extraction of the shot. He lingered, however, in excruciating pain till the next Friday evening, when he expired. He was an officer in the Local Militia, and a young man highly respected.

TUESDAY, the 5th instant, two servants (the huntsman and whipper-in) were found dead in their beds, at the hunting seat of Sir John Dashwood King, Bart. at Bourton-on-the-Hill, Gloucestershire. It appears, that on retiring to bed the preceding evening, conceiving the room where they slept (over one of the out-buildings) rather damp, they had taken up with them, from a furnace, some live coals in an open coal-scuttle, which they left in the middle of the room; but the place having no chimney or vent of any kind, and being closely shut up during the night, they must have been suffocated from the effect of the sulphuric gas. One of them was found in a sitting posture in bed, as if he had been awakened by the oppression on his breath; but doubtless at a moment when he was too much overcome to effect his escape, or create alarm.

A FINE peacock, belonging to Mr. Henwood, of Carlinham, near Bodmin, was lately attacked by a ferocious hog, and literally torn to pieces. It was more than ninety years of age.

A VERY fine sturgeon, weighing one hundred pounds, was caught at Hampton, this month, and, agreeably to custom, was carried to the Lord Mayor: his Lordship immediately sent it by Nelson, the Deputy Water Bailiff, to the Prince Regent, who graciously accepted it.

A LARGE mastiff-dog, kept at one of the farms belonging to Lord Henry Seymour, in the Isle of Wight, the property of his Lordship's bailiff, a few nights since got loose from its chain, attacked his Lordship's flock of sheep, and, before morning, wounded twenty-one, ten so severely as to render it necessary to kill them; the remaining eleven are so much hurt, that it is doubtful whether several of them will not also be sent to the butcher.

THERE is now in a wood at Bradfield St. Clair, Suffolk, belonging to the Rev. Mr. Davers, a woodcock sitting upon four eggs.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

EPILOGUE TO THE NEW COMEDY OF "OURSELVES."

Written by Mr. T. Dibdin, and spoken by Mrs. Glover.

ON nights like this, when you our mansion grace,
And expectation varies ev'ry face;
The Prologue first, with studied air and dress,
And "bated breath, and whisp'ring humbleness;"
"In bondsman's key" just peeping from the door,
Or scarcely looking from the measur'd floor;
Entreats this honour'd house of patrons will Allow the Author to bring in his bill.—
(shewing one.)
Next in insinuating, wheedling rhyme,
Hopes humbly, 'twill be read a second time;
'Tis heard, committed, censur'd, prais'd, or blam'd,
When, of her office not at all asham'd,
Enter Dame Epilogue, a flippant lass,
Who boldly moves that this said Bill do pass.
And now (to Authors, sign of direst woe)
Critics may rise in Opposition Row,
To prove by each objection they display,
How easier 'tis to damn than write a Play.
While 'mid the "tug of war" some souls more kind,
Pleas'd to be pleas'd, to well-meant errors blind;
Divide the house, till the fell discord ends,
And foes acknowledge this, a "School for Friends;"
Ladies, believe, I should'nt make this fuss,
But that the cause belongs to one of us;
Aye, and I'll say, no matter whom it vex,
Such fair attempts, do credit to the Sex.
If man, proud man, the effort should despise,
And view our failings with o'er curious eyes;
If (aiming to instruct him) calls us vain,
At least they'll give us leave to entertain.
Or, if they won't applaud—the Lordly Elves,
Then, Ladies, we must patronize—Ourselves.
Good Gentlemen, the mode in which you take
This Badinage, assay'd for Woman's sake,
Demands my thanks, nay more, that I should say,
Borrowing once more the Title of our Play,
None than Ourselves more gratefully can view
The proud protection we receive from you.
In climes less blest, while foreign fair ones know
Of war's worst evils, ev'ry piercing woe,
We, of no stern Oppressor's wrath afraid,
The Safety bless we owe your manly aid.
From Pain and Peril us and our's to shield,
You dare the tempests of the flood, and field.
Practis'd in arts, or skill'd in learning's page,
We view in man the genius of the sage:
With pleasing terror, and with aw'd delight,
We recognize each hero in the fight;
To all your worth with veneration bow,
And feel convinc'd you'll not desert us now.

THE CARD PARTY.

OUR eager parties, when the lunar light
Throws its full radiance on the festive night,

Of either sex, with punctual hurry come,
And fill, with one accord, an ample room;
Pleas'd, the fresh packs on cloth of green they see,
And seizing, handle with preluding glee;
They draw, they sit, they shuffle, cut and deal;
Like friends assembled, but like foes to feel:
But yet not all—an happier few have joys
Of mere amusement, and their cards are toys;
No skill nor art, nor fretful hopes have they,
But while their friends are gaming, laugh and play.

Others there are, the veterans of the game,
Who owe their pleasure to their envied fame;
Through many a year, with hard-contested strife,
Have they attain'd this glory of their life:
Such is that ancient burgess, whom in vain
Would gout and fever on his couch detain;
And that large lady, who resolves to come,
Though a first fit has warn'd her of her doom!
These are as oracles, in every cause
They settle doubts, and their decrees are laws;
But all are troubled, when, with dubious look,
Diana questions what Apollo spoke.

Here avarice first, the keen desire of gain,
Rules in each heart and works in every brain;
Alike the veteran-dames and virgins feel,
Nor care what greybeards or what striplings deal;
Sex, age, and station, vanish from their view,
And gold, their sov'reign good, the mingled crowd pursue.

Hence they are jealous, and as rivals, keep
A watchful eye on the beloved heap;
Meantime discretion bids the tongue be still,
And mild good-humour strives with strong ill-will;
Till prudence fails; when, all impatient grown,
They make their grief, by their suspicions, known.

"Sir, I protest, were Job himself at play,
"He'd rave to see you throw your cards away;
"Not that I care a button—not a pin
"For what I lose; but we had cards to win:
"A saint in Heaven would grieve to see such hand
"Cut up by one who will not understand."

"Complain of me! and so you might indeed,
"If I had ventur'd on that foolish lead,
"That fatal heart—but I forgot your play—
"Some folk have ever thrown their hearts away."

"Yes, and their diamonds: I have heard of one
"Who made a beggar of an only son."

"Better a beggar, than to see him tied
"To art and spite, to insolence and pride."

"Sir, were I you, I'd strive to be polite,
"Against my nature, for a single night."

"Against their nature they might show their skill
"With small success, who're maids against their will."

It is too much! alas! my bashful muse
Cannot with half their virulence abuse.
And hark! at other tables discord reigns,
With feign'd contempt for losses and for gains;
Passions awhile are bridled; then they rage,
In waspish youth, and in resentful age;
With scraps of insult—"Sir, when next you play,
"Reflect whose money 'tis you throw away.
"No one on earth can less such things regard,
"But when one's partner does'nt know a card——."

"I scorn suspicion, Ma'am, but while you stand
"Behind that lady, pray keep down your hand."

"Good

"Good Heav'n, revoke! remember, if the set
"Be lost, in honour you shall pay the debt."

"There, there's your money; but, while I have life,
"I'll never more sit down with man and wife;
"They snap and snarl indeed, but in the heat
"Of all their spleen, their understandings meet;
"They are free-masons, and have many a sign,
"That we, poor devils! never can divine:
"May it be told, do ye divide th' amount,
"Or goes it all to family account?"

LAMENTATIONS OF TRAGEDY,

On the Success of the Horses now performing with such unlimited applause at Covent-Garden Theatre.

HUNG be our stage with black!—weep two-legg'd mutes;
Mourn for your Queen, thus levell'd with the brutes!
Nought now avails, our Isabella's call,
The public fly, to see the cattle fall.
And ye, attendant virgins, hence no more
On fierce Calista, or repentant Shore;
Shall ye obsequious, wait on tinsell'd pride;
Ye're useless now, unless you'll wear an hide.
"Seeing what I have seen," ah, woe to me,
Such plaudits to unmeaning mummery,
That Cawdor's Wife, the Moor's lamented Bride,
The sweet Cordelia, every parent's pride;
The lovely Juliet, Imogen sincere,
No more attract, or claim their former tear.
Shakespeare's all-soaring page is far below
The nightly scenes the dew-lap'd fav'rites shew.
Now taught by Governesses sage and kind,
Each little Miss, of opening, docile mind,
Asks dear Papa, to let her see the play
Where nature strikes, tho' dumb, and melts the sense away;
Far, far beyond what Otway's strains explore,
Tho' thrice Castalia strikes the barred door:
Hopeless I sink—in vain the Muse may sing
The Hoof surpasses even the buskin'd King:
Richard, give way! Banquo, avaunt, begone!
Romeo, depart; and let the HORSES on.
Oh! could I think—I who have made men weep,
So fast—they stood in tears, full ancle deep,
Should e'er behold, what sense must see with rage,
Smithfield become the nursery of the STAGE.

ON SHOOTING.

By Mr. John Emery.

REJOICE, Brother Sportsmen! there sets August Sun,
See—skulking behind yonder hill;
To-morrow September declares him her own,
Then rouse up and welcome him, Will.
Get Ponto and Pero, and all the dogs fed,
And look to our tackle, do'st mind?
Come, quick, see it done, then betake thee to bed,
We shall not long tarry behind.

Now stretch'd in the arms of Old Somnus we lay,
"To sleep the dull night into morn;"
At Four thro' the village the Mail bends its way,
We wake with the sound of the horn.
Away to the stubbles behind the Old Farm,
By that time bright Sol will arise;
Let's give him the meeting—come, arm my boys, arm,
And greet his return to our skies.

Hie on! my good dogs there, see Bounce 'gins to draw,
Depend on't the covey is nigh;
Toho! down he is, in the clover below.
Well back'd! Now a brace sure must die.
Then as we advance to the stauch pointer's head,
Our hearts beat in concert together;
They

They rise like a cloud, right and left they drop dead,
Mark! mark! boy, and don't lose a feather.

See Ponto there standing in yonder high bawk,
Proclaims the poor fugitives nigh;
Behold how he's back'd by that villainous hawk,
Suspended between earth and sky.
We raise the bird, pointed the fiend makes his dart,
Ned's double gun now aids him well,
He sends the first charge to the timid bird's heart,
And pursuing the fierce tyrant fell.*

Now mounting the hill to the plain we descend,
Still dealing out death as we roam;
But softly—the lark's evening song's at an end,
Which proclaims it high time to get home.
Observe too the dogs the position admit,
Their fever'd tongues panting assent,
And hark! there's the owl gives us notice to quit,
So now for our cot we are bent.

Then round a wood fire, beneath the snug thatch,
Our wearied limbs calmly repose;
Beguiling the time with a song, glee, or catch,
'Till Jack serenades with his nose.
From a crazy old clock see the cuckoo peeps out,
To warn us night's minutes are reckon'd;
Then bumpers, my boys! and with one jolly shout,
Drink success to September the second.

A BURLESQUE VALENTINE.

BY the great God of War I swear,
By Venus and her golden hair,
And by each god and goddess;
That love has stol'n this tender heart,
And fill'd me full in ev'ry part;
In truth it very odd is.

Then smile on me, my maid of fire,
Thine are the charms that I admire
More than the trumpet's clangour;
And as for the old wife I've got,
I think she soon must go to pot;
If not—why then I'll hang her.

You know, my dear, I married her
For money!—"What a stupid cur,"
Methinks I hear thee crying;
Ah! so I was, but then you know
She's going—where we all must go!
In short, I think she's dying!

When dead!—oh! shudder not, my dear,
We'll dance upon the old girl's bier,
Fantastical and funny;
And as for fate we'll smile at that,
We'll eat and drink—and soon grow fat
Upon the old one's money.

HUNTING SONG.

AWAY to the field, see the morning looks grey,
And sweetly bedappled, forbodes a fine day;
The hounds are all eager the sport to embrace,
And carol aloud to be led to the chase.

CHORUS.

Then hark, in the morn, to the call of the horn,
And join with the jovial crew;
While the season invites, with all its delights,
The health-giving chase to pursue.

How charming the sight, when Aurora first dawns,
To see the bright beagles spread over the lawns,
To welcome the sun now retiring from rest,
Their matins they chaunt as they merrily quest.

But Oh! how each bosom with transport it fills,
To start, just as Phœbus peeps over the hills;
While joyous, from valley to valley resounds
The shouts of the hunters and cry of the hounds.

See how the brave hunters, with courage elate,
Fly hedges or ditches, or top the barr'd gate;
Borne by their bold coursers, no dangers they fear,
And give to the winds all vexation and care.

Ye cits, for the chase quit the joys of the town,
And scorn the dull pleasure of sleeping in down;
Uncertain your toil, or for honour or wealth,
Our's still is repaid with contentment and health.

* The above is founded on fact, which the author (Mr. J. Emery) was an eye-witness to while on a visit in Hertfordshire.
